EMBELLISHED WITH

A beautiful Frontiſpiece of the Sportſman's Return; a capital Etching of the Horſe and Lion; and a Vignette Copper Plate Title Page for the EIGHTH VOLUME.

LONDON:

PRINTED FOR THE PROPRIETORS;

And Sold by J. WHEBLE, No. 18, Warwick-ſquare, Warwick-lane, near St. Paul's; John Hilton, at Newmarket; and by every Bookſeller and Stationer in Great Britain and Ireland.

TO THE READERS AND CORRESPONDENTS OF THE SPORTING MAGAZINE.

WE are highly gratified in the perusal of the Article just received from T. H. his Ideas are perfectly congenial with our own; he may expect to see them noticed early in the First Number of our next Volume.

Account of Mr. Andrews, the celebrated Billiard Player, is inserted in this Month's Magazine.

To the Communication of Little B's Visit to Ranelagh, we have likewise given a place in the present Number.

The Lines of A. Z. arrived too late for a Place this Month; they shall, however, be attended to in a future Number.

We have received several very interesting Communications, which must (however reluctantly) be also postponed on account of room, till a future Number.

The Huntsman's Halloo has at length reached our Ears;—we shall be much obliged, if the Writer of this Article will perform the Promise he made some Months since.

We cannot, in reason, comply with the Request of a Northern Correspondent; his feelings, according to the Tenor of the Relation, are certainly too frigid even to admit the claim of Humanity upon them. Whatever our further Opinion may be on this Subject, is of little moment to the Writer; suffice it to say, the Article is altogether inadmissible.

ERRATA.—In our last, page 232, line 17 from the top of the second column, for vatrician read patrician.

 We should consider ourselves as wanting in Gratitude to our numerous Subscribers, for the very liberal Encouragement they have at all times given to our Performance, were we to close the present Volume without again returning our warmest Thanks to them. We are proud to assert, that not at any Period has our Exertions beem more liberally rewarded than at the present; a rapid and extensive Sale has been the natural consequence; and as we are persuaded, a continuance of our usual Endeavours to please will ever ensure to us a Patronage no less numerous than respectable, it is with full Confidence we look forward, and assure them, that the same Attention and Perseverance shall still be pursued with unremitting alacrity.

With respect to the decorative Part of the present Volume, we trust it will not be considered presumption in us to assert, that it has not in any degree fallen short of that Elegance, both in Design and Execution, which prevails in the foregoing Part of our Work; and in order more fully to complete the Embellishments now before us, we have presented our Readers with a beautiful Frontispiece, representing the Sportsman's Return, which we trust will be particularly gratifying to the generality of them.

NEW JOCKEY CLUB.

No. VI.

The EARL of EGREMONT.

IT is a very pleaſant taſk to become the biographer of a nobleman, whoſe conduct in life has been ſo truly laudable, in all the eſſential points of the human character, that public reſpect has uniformly accompanied his appearance, and praiſe and gratitude his actions.

Lord Egremont's propenſities to the turf, entitle him, in a particular degree, to our notice; and, perhaps, the ſporting eſtabliſhments at Newmarket, and other places, derive no ſmall ſhare of reflected importance, from his lordſhip's continuing to be their ſupport and ornament:—and, without meaning invidiouſly, or intending any perſonal affront, we muſt aſſert it as our belief, with a few others of a ſimilar deſcription, as there are not many, that whenever this nobleman thinks proper to relinquiſh the purſuit, the manly ſcience of horſe-racing will ſuffer materially in the general eſtimation, and its declenſion and diſuſe, be, of courſe, accelerated.—Though the advantages reſulting from ſuch meetings are, unqueſtionably, very numerous to ſociety, and their accompaniments very pleaſurable to individuals, yet, it muſt be admitted, that its improper effects are not few; and as mankind are more eager to faſten upon the diſadvantages of any inſtitution, than its benefits, we ſhould not be ſurpriſed that this ſpecies of gaming has been decried, with more malignancy than truth, and that it is only around ſuch characters as Lord Egremont, tha its admirers and friends can rally with confidence, and diſpute the harſhneſs and expediency of the charge.

There is one point, among many others, ſo thoroughly amiable and exemplary in the character of Lord Egremont, that we ſhould hold ourſelves as highly inexcuſable to paſs it over; we allude to his benevolence:—his munificence has been ſo continual, as to be now proverbial; and the manner in which he confers an obligation, renders it of double value to the individual who receives it; he either ſweetens the gift by ſome peculiar grace of expreſſion, or communicates it without ſuffering the name of the donor to be known: he has been ſo long in the latter habit of beneficence, that whenever thoſe, who know the preſent ſtate of ſociety well, behold an arrangement of ſubſcribers to a public or private charity, and ſee the ſum of 50l. or an 100l. annexed to initials only, the general idea is, that the concealed benefactor is Lord Egremont.

This nobleman, in common with Mr. Fox, poſſeſſes the happy and enviable talent, to be able to maintain a long commerce with the ſame perſons, and to be ſtill agreeable; and this high kind of merit can only proceed from a conſciouſneſs of being worthy. Such perſons are not apprehenſive of thoſe moments, wherein we relax, and are not in an humour to conſtrain ourſelves, to conceal our infirmities.—he is polite without being ceremoniously troublesome; it is that sort of politeness, which is the result of a manly and modest sentiment; we say modest, because pride is the natural source of rudeness; modesty combats and dissipates that mist which pride inspires in the mind of man, and figuratively speaking, hides him from himself.

During the extraordinary, and in a very great degree unmerited embarrassment of the Prince of Wales, it must have afforded this nobleman infinite satisfaction to know, that he was a person in whom his royal highness could confide, and that in a stormy moment, when the conduct both of ADMINISTRATION and OPPOSITION must have rendered him distrustful of the majority of mankind; yet, under Lord Egremont's hospitable roof, and in his friendly and inartificial conversation, could the heir-apparent of the nation repose and find solacement, when the base and crooked policy of the hour had made a temporary irruption upon his peace and character: such men as him, are far above those minor temptations of the heart which impel so many to sacrifice their honor and truth to gratify their avarice or love of power: he is one of those few personages who decorate this age, and laudably and nobly resists that tide of meanness and craft, which appears to be carrying so many willing sacrifices adown the stream of ruin: knowing the shortness of human existence, he does not believe it necessary or beneficial to resign his independence to promote an irregular ambition.

In the hard frost, which occurred a few years since, and when the snow had fallen in such immense quantities as to destroy all agricultural pursuits, and reduced the labouring poor to a state of unusual misery, his lordship assembled all the wretched cottagers who lived in the neighbourhood of his seat at Petworth, in Sussex, and employed them to shovel the snow from the right side of the road to the left; and as this order was completed before a thaw took place, the steward told his lordship that his orders had been obeyed, and desired to know what they should do next, when this philanthropic peer replied, "Let them shovel it again from the left side to the right;" at the same time remarking, very properly, that "it was necessary his bounty for their relief, should be conveyed through the medium of labour, as those who in any way encouraged idleness in the first instance, would probably be the innocent cause of promoting vice in the issue."

Royal Chace.

Sept. 29.

ON Sunday, the master of the stag-hounds (Earl of Sandwich), left town to take the command at Swinley Lodge, where both horses and hounds are in the highest condition.

[A valuable correspondent having promised us an account of the first hunt, and constant communications from the forest during the season, we have kept this part of our magazine open for his favour, which is as follows:]

On Monday (Holyrood day falling on a Sunday) at ten, Lord Sandwich, with the stag-hounds, was in waiting at Ascot by appointment: at half past ten his Majesty arrived, attended by Lord Cathcart, and Colonel Manners, when the stag was instantly turned out below the obelisk, before a very numerous assemblage of sportsmen; but turning instantly to the right and crossing all the bad ground and swamps at the back of the dog kennel, at least, half the company were completely discomfited and lost in the first five miles. Passing through the strong enclosures at the back of WINKFIELD-ROW and the CHURCH, he nearly reached NEW LODGE, when turning short to the left through the inclosures of NUPTOWN, CHARIDGE, and WARFIELD with the hounds close at his haunches; the whole field (with the exception of five or six horsemen) were entirely thrown out and never came to the spot till near three quarters of an hour after the deer was taken at BROCK BRIDGE, with one hour only of as hard running as it is possible to conceive. Of the old forest SPORTSMEN, but few were out, among these where Mr. Batson, Mr. Ravenshaw, Mr. Schutz, jun. and Mr. Taplin: the latter of whom took qualification tickets for the king's hundred guineas at Ascot, with his bay horse ROYALIST, by KING HEROD, and his bay mare PORTIA, by PROSPECT.

His Majesty has fixed Ascot-heath for the meeting place on Saturday at the same hour. We are confident it will afford our readers great happiness to find, as it does us to report, that his Majesty never appeared in better health or spirits, tho' somewhat disappointed that the event of the day afforded him so little of the enchanting melody of the hounds.

CLOSE OF THE SUMMER THEATRE.

Haymarket, Thursday, Sept. 15.

THIS evening, after a very prosperous season, the performances at this theatre closed with the Iron Chest, and the Village Lawyer.

Between the play and the entertainment, Mr. Palmer came forward, and in a few words expressed the thanks of the proprietor for the liberal patronage he had experienced, and in the name of the performers took leave of the public for the season, testifying their gratitude for the encouragement and approbation with which their exertions had been received.

OPENING OF THE WINTER THEATRES.

COVENT-GARDEN.

Monday, Sept. 12.

THIS theatre opened with Hamlet and the Doldrum. The audience, as usual, testified the most lively satisfaction at seeing their old favourites renew those exertions which have so often contributed to their winter's amusement. Several alterations have taken place at this house, which will tend considerably both to the accommodation of the public, and the advantage of the manager.

The former entrances to the boxes, by the Bow-street door, is now closed, and the grand saloon converted into a handsome coffee-room. The present entrance is now by spacious passages under the former avenues, and through a commodious waiting room, where persons are admitted at the end of the second act, on paying half-price, to remain there till the admission of half-price visitors, instead of waiting in the outer lobby, or in the streets.

The piazza entrance is widened and rendered much more commodious dious than it was before. Seven rows are added to eleven of the centre boxes in the second and third tiers, which will admit 144 persons more than usual, the produce of which will be 43l. 4s. a night to the manager.

The large rooms, which were appropriated to private offices and the Beef Steak Club, are now thrown open in addition to the lobbies behind the boxes, and give airiness and a commodious space for the loungers.

DRURY-LANE.

Wednesday, Sept. 21.

This elegant theatre opened last night, for the first time, this season to a fashionable, and with every allowance for the time of the year, a numerous audience, with the Prize, Child of Nature, and High Life Below Stairs.

As any material alteration, or embellishment in the present finished state of the house, would, have been a work of superfluity, none accordingly has taken place. The only change of moment respects the Frontispiece, or as it is generally called, the drop between the acts. The former has been removed, and a new one, painted by Greenwood, is prefixed to the stage. It represents a very grand and striking piece of architecture, which, in the execution, does the artist great credit, and has the happy effect of at once decorating the scene of representation, and enlivening the audience part of the house.

The performers, in the order of their coming, were in general cheered with the reiterated plaudits of the audience, and the different pieces went off with their accustomed success.

The New Brighton Guide; or, Companion for Young Ladies and Gentlemen to all the Watering Places in Great Britain, with Notes historical, moral, and personal.

This New Brighton Guide is from the pen of the well-known satirist and critic, Anthony Pasquin, Esq. It is epistolary-poetical, consisting of a correspondence between two Buildings, the Pavilion at Brighton, and Carlton-house, and one letter from St. James's Palace, (the building,) mostly on the past and present affairs of the Prince of Wales.

The Brighton Code (given as a note in prose) contains a set of rules to be observed by military idlers, young ladies, and others, at watering places, and after the manner of Swift, telling them, "to do that which they should not do:" but the most interesting part of the pamphlet is, a very long note, headed with the words,

AN AUTHENTIC SOLUTION TO THE ROYAL MYSTERY.

[From this we shall present our readers with the following short extract.]

"Those persons who are permitted to domesticate with his Majesty, know that he is as much disgusted at the conduct of the Princess of Wales, as the Queen, the Princesses, the Dutchess of York, and all the royal brothers; and this strong disapprobation materially originated from the following circumstance:—When the Princess of Wales mentioned certain terms of accommodation, the Prince of Wales cordially acceded to them, and that in a manner so thoroughly handsome, that the King rapturously acknowledged the Prince had behaved like a man of honor; but mark! when when it was believed that the embarrassments were wholly done away, the Princess of Wales assumed a different feature, and dictated more terms, and those of such a tendency, as could not be complied with by any man of spirit. When his Majesty heard this, he was so deeply affected and hurt, that he wrote her a letter, informing her, the Princess of Wales, that, as he thought her conduct improper, he would never more interfere, if she did not comply with the original terms. The only comment to be made on this extraordinary proceeding is, that she has seldom been with any of the royal family since, but upon cold visits, and she was forbid to pay them any visits at Weymouth."

Anthony Pasquin appears to be in the secret as to those who have become meddlers in the dispute, and taking part with the Princess of Wales: these he spares not, and in proof we venture beyond our intended limits to give the catalogue he has furnished:

"It cannot be supposed, that the Duke of Gloucester, who is the brother of his Majesty, and the uncle of the Prince of Wales, could be impelled to the prosecution of any indiscretion that might possibly injure the great interests of his august family;—the magnanimity and wisdom of this prince both in public and private, forbid the supposition—if he indeed resembled the Duke of B— in Germany, who is said to dine daily with his mistress at the head of his table, and in the presence of his wife; but that is impossible—the Duke of Gloucester is so honored and respected by his truly amiable dutchess, that he can eat, drink, speak, or sleep with her whenever he pleases; and that he can and has done so for the last fifteen years, Lady Almeria Carpenter can determine: it is true, that, to save trouble, she becomes occasionally the mutual messenger to both; but that is merely to keep up the nuptial farce in the establishment, amd is uncommonly agreeable and amusing to all the parties.

"It cannot be supposed, that Prince William of Gloucester can be in any way inimical to the Prince of Wales, as his education must have been perfectly politic and moral; his father being notorious for his sagacity, and his mother for her humility, candour, and forbearance. It may be true that Prince William has been paying his addresses to all the princesses, and it may likewise be true, thatall have rejected him; yet that might not curdle the milk of his amiable disposition, as there is Lord M—tm—s in similar, or more adverse circumstances, and yet his philosophy was never ruffled, nor his habits ever changed.

It cannot be supposed that Mr. Charles Grenville, son-in-law to the Duke of Portland, and who is under-secretary to the sovereign, would be severely vindictive towards his royal master's family, but particularly the heir-apparent of the realm!—as such argument and bitterness might be considered wonderfully irreconbileable in an official person thus situated; and it is not greatly remote from our usual comprehension to believe, that such a direlection of manners and language would not be very palatable to the King, or very advantageous to that state, of which his noble relation is an extraneous buttress, and himself a post—we regret that we cannot apply the term pillar to either.

It cannot be supposed that the Marquis de Noailles, who is a noble noble mendicant in this island, would so far hazard his personal convenience, as to unite in the propagation of such disastrous calumny; and especially at this momentous æra, when it is not only imagined, but felt and understood, that any indistinct motion or eccentricity of an emigrant from France not perfectly consistent, or, in plainer and more unequivocal matter, not satisfactory to Mr. Pitt, would not only be extremely detrimental to the peace and fortune of such an improvident alien, but, according to probability and proof, operate as the cause to have him incontinently and forcibly driven from the protection of that legislature, whose tolerance, it would be argued, he had forfeited and abused!

"It cannot be supposed, that, of all the bipeds which amble about this populous city, Tommy Onslow, would be the manikin to prattle disrespectfully of the Prince; it cannot be believed that a creature apparently so harmless, could have any perfidiousness in his soul; the size of which, if analogous to his frame, cannot have room for more than two passions, and those are presumed to be, the love of himself, and the love of his ponies. This amazing little gentleman was never known to be envious but once in his existence; and the miserable object of that shabby emotion was—a stage coachman!

"It cannot be supposed that Mrs. Robinson, or the Perdita, or the lame Sappho, or what you will, would, in the moment that she is receiving an annuity of five hundred pounds from the bounty of the Prince, unite in the interested cabal who labour to tarnish his good name;—she should have remained, at least, inactive during the crooked progress of the floating falsehood. How lamentable it would be to admit, that the force of any species of jealousy can awaken impertinencies, and connect ideal events, for the unwarrantable purpose of suppressing an unoffending individual whom we envy, but whom it was intended by Truth and Nature we should respect!—But it is not possible—Mrs. Robinson's morality cannot be so far unhinged."

Recent Sporting.

Sept. 29.

THE sporting, as well as the military corps, are all upon the march to their different places of destination. The late rains have afforded opportunity to blood the hounds in Panton's, Newman's, and the Marchioness of Salisbury's hunts.

Sportsmen in the environs of the metropolis, who wish to insure a gallop, may have that pleasure on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, with Mr. Chapman's excellent pack of harriers on Wimbledon Common, Kingston Hill, and that district.

The subscription fox-hounds (late Lord Berkeley's) hunt the Gerard's Cross and Buckinghamshire country, till the first week in November, when they take to Bisham, Shottesbrook, Billingbear, &c. for two months. Sportsmen hunting this quarter, will find the neighbourhood of Maidenhead the most centrical situation for their horses.

A TREA-

A Treatise on Farriery, with Anatomical Plates.

OF WORMS.

WORMS are living animals, of various forms, structure, and magnitude, which proceed from the eggs of insects taken into the stomach with the food, and are bred in the cavities of the intestines, and are nourished by corrupt juices. They produce various symptoms, and disturb all the animal functions.

These worms are of three kinds; bots, the teretes, or round worms, and the ascarides.

Bots are bred in the stomach, and resemble woodlice, only they are rounder, and have sharp, small, prickly feet along the sides of their belly, by which they adhere closely to the part where they are bred: those in the stomach are red, but those which skulk in the strait gut are white. The first of these often occasion terrible symptoms, and throw the horse into convulsions. Dr. Bracken, who retains the exploded doctrine of trituration, or grinding of the stomach for the performance of digestion, denies there can be any worms in that part. He does not deny but that worms are found in the stomach after a horse is dead, but then he affirms they creep there, after the grinding power of the stomach ceases. He likewise owns that worms have been voided by the mouth and nostrils of the human species; but then he supposes they run away upwards or downwards, as they can, to avoid being crushed to death: he likewise adds, that worms that have been vomited up, have never been very lively. If this reason is of any weight, it can be contradicted; for a worm has been known to crawl through the nostrils of a woman, that was several inches long, and as lively as any earth-worm could be. But let that be as it will, he would now be accounted but a poor philosopher, who should assert, that digestion is performed in the manner this gentleman mentions. It is now allowed by all able physicians, that the solution of aliments in the stomach is performed by heat and a menstruum. This last is principally the saliva which mixes with the food in chewing, and being of a fermentiscible nature, dissolves that part of the aliment that is most fit for nourishment, or at least extracts their finest parts, or such as are most proper to enter the lacteal vessels. Besides we find many substances that we swallow which are not triturated, or ground to powder. Thus, if you swallow a bit of boiled carrot without chewing, a nut-kernel, or an almond, you will find them come away with very little alteration; which shews that the force of the stomach is merely imaginary. Nor can it be reasonably asserted, that this power in horses is greater than in men, because the coats of the stomach are thinner in horses than in men. Add to this, the experience of every groom, who often finds oats come away from horses, that have been swallowed whole, with very little seeming alteration. But to return to my subject.

The teretes, or round worms, are like earth-worms, and are of the same kind as those that are commonly voided by children; only they are sharper at their ends than earth-worms, and are more callous in the middle. With these sharp ends they prick and corcorrode the guts, and sometimes make their way into the cavity of the abdomen; at least they devour so much of the best juices of the aliment, that the horse seldom thrives till they are dislodged. In children they seldom exceed the length of a span, but in horses they are often eighteen inches long, and as thick as a finger.

The third sort are the ascarides, which are small and slender, like needles, and are chiefly found in the small intestines, which they gnaw and vellicate, and often come away in large quantities with excrements.

There is a fourth kind of worm, called the tape worm, which has not been taken notice of by authors as afflicting horses; yet as it has been found in the bodies of most other animals, there is little doubt to be made, but it is sometimes in horses. This runs all the length of guts, and has been found in men to be forty feet long.

Among other causes; it is certain that the food of horses is most likely to contribute to the generation of worms; for as they eat many kinds of grass and herbage, wherein the eggs of these animals may abound, it is no wonder they should be conveyed into the stomach and guts by these means. The bots are found in horses in the months of May and June, and continue to afflict them for a fortnight or three weeks, and then disappear. The round worms and ascarides infect horses at all times of the year.

Bots are visible to the naked eye, if the strait gut is examined, to which they stick, and are often thrust out with the dung, along with a yellowish matter like melted brimstone. These only make a horse uneasy, by causing a tickling, as in men; for which reason he often rubs his backside against a post. But those that take up their residence in the stomach, have quite different effects, which appear all on a sudden, and throw a horse into convulsions, with violent agonies. The round worms give so little disturbance, that they are hard to be discovered, unless by his voiding one or two now and then. Sometimes great numbers will come away together, when they are very small, and have but little time to grow.

Ascarides may be soon found out, because they are often voided with the dung; and they make a horse look lean and jaded, his hair stares, he often strikes his hind feet against his belly, but without the symptoms of the cholic; for if he squats down on his belly, he remains very quiet for a little while, and then gets up and feeds, without attempting to roll or tumble.

The cure of bots in the strait gut is very easy, because you need do nothing more than give him savine chopt very small along with chopt garlick, twice a day, with moistened oats or bran. The dose for one time is a spoonful of savine and four cloves of garlick. But if a horse is turned into a good pasture at that time, even this trouble may be saved.

When there are bots in the stomach, no time is to be lost; because when the convulsions have shut up the horse's mouth, he cannot be brought to swallow any thing. Therefore give him two drams of mercurius dulcis in conserve of roses, or in water and flour made into a paste, as being nearest at hand; because fetching any thing that causes a delay may be of dangerous consequence.

quence. It may be washed down with a hornful of warm water. There can be little doubt of the nature of the convulsions, if it be considered that this distemper always appears at one particular time of the year, viz. in May or June.

If this medicine procures a truce, you may give him three or four hornfuls of the following decoction three or four times a day:

Take savine, garlick, and valerian root, of each two ounces; of camomile flowers, an ounce; of saffron, two drams: boil these a little in four quarts of water, and then strain off the liquor. When it is cool, add two ounces of the fetid tincture, which is the same as tincture of assafœtida, and two ounces of the tincture of castor; mix them. Shake the vessel every time you give any to the horse.

As these convulsions proceed from worms, the speediest method of cure is by destroying the cause, which is to be done only by anthelmintics, or worm-destroying medicines; though in regard to the symptoms cephalics have been mixt therewith; insomuch that the virtues of both being united, we may hope for the better success. Gibson, instead of the above, advises pennyroyal and rue, and half an ounce of castor and assafœtida to be tied up in a rag, and then hot water to be poured upon the ingredients. Now, what great virtues can be drawn from these, which are the principal cephalics, every apothecary's apprentice is able to determine: therefore what is here prescribed is a much better and more efficacious medicine. These tinctures may be made by putting half an ounce of castor in powder, or well bruised, into half a pint of common brandy, and an ounce of assafœtida to half a pint of spirits of wine, and letting them stand by the fire side, and they will be fit for use in a few days time. It will not be amiss likewise to observe, that Gibson prescribes handfuls, which is a very indeterminate quantity, and ought to be banished out of every receipt where the virtues of the herb so prescribed are to be depended upon.

Round worms, though they produce no violent symptoms, yet they prey, as it were, upon the vitals of the horse, and render him dispirited and inactive. To dislodge these, bitters are of great use; and aloes given to an ounce and a half, with a dram of the oil of savine, will be sufficient for this purpose. This likewise will be sufficiently purgative, without the addition of jalap, which Gibson directs. If this should fail, we must have recourse to the preparation of tin; and as the mosaic gold is only tin reduced to a powder, and a little coloured, nothing can be more proper. Therefore, half an ounce of mosaic gold, and half an ounce of myrrh, made up into a ball, and given twice a day, will soon destroy these troublesome animals. When any come away, it is a sign they are all killed; and then the horse may take two or three aloetic balls to carry them out of the body.

The ascarides are not seated in the strait gut, like those in the human body, but seem to be lodged in the small guts, near the stomach, and devour the most nourishing part of the aliments. They often cause the horse to fall into sick fits, of no long duration; after which he eats his meat as heartily as before. However, they cause the horse to grow lean, and look as if he was surfeited; his mouth appears whiter than usual, and smells offensively.

The worms may be dislodged with mosaic gold above-mentioned; or with two drams of mercurius dulcis, made into a ball with an ounce of conserve of wormwood, and as much powder of myrrh as will make it stiff enough for a ball. It must be given in a morning, and the horse must fast three or four hours before and after the taking it, the next morning he must have an aloetic ball to purge it off. These may be repeated two or three times more, with the interval of seven or eight days between.

There are other ways of giving mercury or quicksilver, which will answer the same end. Thus you may mix half an ounce of æthiops mineral, with a sufficient quantity of extract of savine to make it into a ball. If you mix the æthiops mineral with a dram of the oil of savine, and an ounce of succotrine aloes, and make them into a ball with solutive syrup of roses, then there will be no need of a purge the following day. Or you may kill two drams of quicksilver with half an ounce of Venice turpentine, rubbing them together till the globules of the quicksilver disappear, and then mix them with the aloes and the oil of savine as before. But the dose must be repeated but seldom with any of the compositions of mercury or quicksilver, for fear of a salivation, which a horse is more subject to than a man.

All metallic substances that may be taken inwardly, seem very proper to kill worms; for we know by experience that iron will do the same as tin and mercury; and it has been usual to give an ounce of the filings of iron every day, with wetted bran for this purpose. For the same reason smiths' forge water is a very proper drink. But as for lead and copper, or any of their preparations, they should never be given inwardly upon any account. There have been preparations of gold, which have been highly recommended for various diseases; but the dearness of that metal renders all the enquiries into the propriety of the encomiums entirely unnecessary.

Gibson seems to reject the powder of tin, for no other reason than the difficulty of making it; but that objection is obviated, by substituting mosaic gold in its room; and where that is not to be had, half an ounce of the filings of tin will answer the same purpose. Some give equal parts of crude antimony and brimstone, morning and night, and others the same quantity of equal parts of cinnabar of antimony and guaiacum; but nothing can be better than what is already recommended. Strong purges which some advise, always do more harm than good, except in some particular cases. When the horse has a weak stomach, a quart of smith's forge water is very good, but it may be mended with camomile-flowers, wormwood, orange-peel, the lesser centaury, and other bitter herbs, allowing about four ounces to three pints of water, and letting them boil for a short time. Some recommend two ounces of æthiops mineral mixed with the same quantity of powder of anniseeds, and made into a ball with a spoonful of honey.

DUTCH

DUTCH METHOD of EMPLOYING DOGS.

[From Pratt's Gleanings.]

THE very dogs of Holland are conſtrained to promote the trade of the republic, inſomuch, that ſave the great dogs of faſhion and ſtate, which run before or after their lords and ladies equipages; and, in imitation often of their betters, are above being of any uſe; there is not an idle dog of any ſize in the ſeven provinces. You ſee them in harneſs at all parts of the Hague, and ſome other towns tugging at barrows, and little carts, with their tongues almoſt ſweeping the ground, and their poor hearts almoſt ready to beat through their ſides. Frequently three, four, five, and ſometimes ſix abreaſt, carrving men and merchandize, with he ſpeed of little horſes. And in your walk from the Hague gate to Scheveling, (where we will preſently make an excurſion), you encounter at all hours of the day, an incredible number loaded with fiſh and men, under the burden of which they run off at a long trot, and ſometimes (when driven by young men or boys) at full gallop, the whole mile and half, which is the diſtance from gate to gate; nor, on their return, are they ſuffered to come empty, being filled not only with the aforeſaid men or boys, (for almoſt every Dutchman hates walking when he can ride, though half a mile); but with ſuch commodities as cannot be had at the village.—I have ſeen theſe poor brutes in the middle of ſummer, urged beyond their force, till they have dropped on the road to gather ſtrength; which is ſeldom the caſe, however, except when they have the misfortune to fall under the management of boys; for the Dutch are the fartheſt from being cruel to their domeſtic dumb animals, of any people in the world; on the contrary, an Hollander, of whatever rank, is ſo merciful unto his beaſt, whether horſe, dog, cow, &c. that they are the objects of his marked attention, as ſleek ſkins, happy faces, and plump ſides, ſufficiently demonſtrate. The cows, and oxen for draught, they rub down, curry, and clean, till they are as gloſſy as the moſt pampered ſteed in England. Nay, you frequently ſee them with a light fancy dreſs, to guard them from the flies, and other annoying animalcula in the meadows, which are the fineſt in the world, and in a warmer ſuit of cloths during the winter; even theſe canine ſlaves look hale and well as to condition, and being hibituated to labour, feel little hardſhip in it. Happy, however, thrice happy is the dog who has the luck to be born of humbler and lowly parents, and is ſacred, by his inſignificance, from labour. Like many a man, who, having neither talents nor ſize for a hero, derives many a ſnug enjoyment from his unfitneſs to take an active part in the toils of ambition. But dogs of this deſcription have yet greater privileges in Holland than you imagine. Like other little things, they are held precious, and ſo fondled and patted, that either a lap-dog, or a lover in England, where thoſe animals, you know, are ſometimes neglected, as indeed, in that country are all favourites, might envy them; for, if you think a Dutch woman, and a beautiful woman are incompatible, you are miſtaken, as I ſhall take occaſion to ſhew.

In my firſt viſit (a winter one) to the Hague, I entered into the intereſts of theſe poor day-labouring dogs ſo truly, that I wondered they did not go mad, or that I did not hear of the canine diſtraction more in this country than in ours; and on being told there were certain tain times (the dog days) when a heavy fine was to be paid upon any dog being ſeen in the ſtreet, I ſuppoſed this was the caſe, till the ſummer following, being at thi delightful ſea ſide village of Schevelling, I obſerved, ſeveral times in the day, theſe draft dogs brought down to the beach, and bathed, a practice which no boubt equally prevented them from this dreadful diſorder before-mentioned, and gave them ſtrength to go through their work.

"It is fortunate alſo, that Holland is a country ſomewhat prone to be ſtrict in the ceremonies of religion, by the obſervance of which the dogs, like their maſters, find the ſeventh day, a day of unbroken reſt: for 'Sunday ſhines a ſabbath-day to them.' The firſt impreſſion (which is allowed a grand point, you know) being much in favour of theſe induſtrious creatures, I had an eye on them, as well in the hours of their repoſe as toil; and felt my heart warm to ſee ſeveral, whom I had obſerved very heavily laden on the Saturday, taking a ſound nap, out-ſtretched and happy at their maſter's doors, on the day on which their leiſure is even an allotment and bounty of heaven. All the morning and afternoon they have remained baſking in the ſun, or in the ſhade, in profound tranquility, while a number of unthinking whelps, and lazy puppies, who had been paſſing their time in idleneſs all the week, were playing their gambols in the ſtreet, not without a vain attempt to wake the ſeniors, and make them join in their amuſement. Towards evening, I have, in my ſun-ſetting rounds, been much pleaſed to notice the honeſt creatures ſit at their reſpective threſholds, looking quite refreſhed, giving occaſionally into a momentary frolic, and the next morning returning to the labours of the week abſolutely renewed.

Reader—ſtranger—art thou too proud of heart—or too full of the dignity of human nature—to enter into theſe brute concerns? Paſs on then, and pity my weakneſs, but not without remembering that

'Dogs are honeſt creatures,
'Ne'er fawn on any that they love not;
'And I'm a friend to dogs. They
'Ne'er betray their maſters.'

If therefore thou haſt no feeling for their ſufferings, reſpect at leaſt their virtues:

'Mark but his true, his faithful way;
'And in thy ſervice copy Tray.'

Account of MR. ANDREWS the celebrated BILLIARD PLAYER.

MR. Andrews was born to an eaſy independant fortune, and commenced life at a time that he was incapable of judging of the world or of himſelf, led away by a ſingle paſſion, for he was not actuated by any other, he devoted himſelf entirely to the blind goddeſs, and worſhipped her inceſſantly under the form of two ivory balls.

He was remarkably thin, not very tall, though above the middle ſize; his face was a perfect vacuum, with reſpect to every poſſible idea except billiards. So infatuated was Mr. Andrews in purſuing this game to attain the ſummit of excellence at it, that he ſacrificed days, nights, weeks, months and years.

At length he arrived at ſuch a degree of perfection, as well in the theoretical, as the practical part of the game, that there was no player in England, and it may be added, with equal truth, in any part of the

the world could equal him, except one, who was the celebrated Abraham Carter, of billiard memory, who kept the tables at the corner of the Piazzas, Ruſſel Street, Covent Garden. Be it obſerved here, both their fortes lay in long play, or rather in dead trailing, except that they did not turn-up.

Andrews was the moſt devoted adept of this game that ever nature produced, he ſeemed but to vegetate in a billiard room, and, indeed, he did little more any where elſe. He was a perfect billiard veletudinarian, in the moſt rigid ſignification of the expreſſion. He eat, drank, ſlept, walked, nay talked but to promote the ſyſtem of the white balls. His regimen was tea, and toaſt and butter, for breakfaſt, for dinner, and for ſupper.

It might be imagined that ſo regular a profeſſor would obtain all the advantages that could reſult from the ſcience, even in the moſt occult parts. He won conſiderable ſums, which being poſſeſſed of, made him forget the real value of money; and, he at length held it in ſuch contempt, that when he was playing for five, or even ten ponnds a game, he would not take the leaſt pains to win. There was a latent fineſſe in this, but it did not operate to his advantage, he was lying by for great bets, but as they were but ſeldom offered, the ſtrength of his play being very well known, he often loſt by repeated ſmall ſums, very conſiderable ones.

It is generally believed he has played for more money at billiards than any other perſon: there was a ſtanding match between him and Colonel W——e, which they generally played for to the tune of a hundred.

He one night won of the Colonel upwards of a thouſand pounds, and the Colonel appointed to meet him the next day, to go with him into the city, to transfer ſtock to him to the amount of the ſum loſt. Being in a hackney-coach, they toſſed up who ſhould pay for it. Andrews loſt, and upon this ſmall beginning he was excited to continue till he had loſt the whole ſum he won the night before at billiards. When the coachman ſtopt to ſet down, he was told to get up again, and drive them back, as they had no occaſion to get out.

By theſe purſuits he loſt very conſiderable ſum which he had won at billiards, and in a few years hazard, and other games at chance, ſtript him of every ſhilling he could command. He had ſtill left a ſmall annuity which he endeavoured to diſpoſe of, but it was ſo ſecure that he could not ſell it, otherwiſe it is moſt probable that it was ſoon to be transferred at the gaming table, ſo that he was compelled to eat in ſpite of his teeth. He very lately lived in a retired manner in Kent, where he declared to an intimate old acquaintance that he never knew contentment while he was rolling in money, but ſince he was obliged to live on a ſcanty pittance, he thought himſelf one of the happieſt men in the world.

A viſit to RANELAGH, Characteriſtic and Sentimental.

NOW my boy! mind your eye, this nigh we'll have a row, a bit of fun, or a frolic, it gives a zeſt to life—and makes the load of exiſtence ſit eaſy on our ſhoulders. —D—n your pragmatical quizzes, whoſe callous ſouls feel not the delicious ſenſations of doing a little innocent miſchief.—Life's life, my boy, and while we live let us enjoy it.—Thus ſpoke Dick Ranter as he walked through St. James's Park, in his way to Ranelagh,—linked arm in arm with a buck of the same kidney, for birds of a feather will flock together, a proverb amply exemplified in what is termed a party of pleasure; and for a certertainty there are not a greater variety of the feathered tribe, than of mankind and womankind; and we may with some propriety compare the present race of belles with the feathered choristers—it will hold good in more respects than one—yea, verily! Damsels are flighty, so are birds.—Many wear top-nots, so do birds; for though they often rob the birds of their feathers to ornament the head, birds frequently steal their hair to make nests—tit for tat.—Would to God they took as much pains in furnishing the inside apartments, as in whitewashing and plaistering the outside. With feather crowned noddle they may not improperly be compared to a hearse-horse, whose decorated head—avast there!—says an instantaneous thought, carry not the imagination of a lady near a dismal looking hearse, whose awful appearance may chill the sparkling blood, and bring on the hysterico, nervico affections.

Ye learned and pompous looking M D's. have you any objections to the name I now christen that fashionable feminine disorder, which brings so much grist to your mill—if not insert it in your next edition of "Recipe Repository." But the sight of your physical wigs has attracted me magnetically (as I may say) from my present case, which I verily believe is as clear and intelligible, as many of your prescriptions.—Look to yourself, says Reason, examine your steps, and walk on with circumspection, nor thus wander about, but stick to the point.

Reason, says I, for your friendly counsel, I feel myself indebted—but please to give me my own way in matters of this sort, or I must be totally silent—be dumb. I am fond of looking about as I pass over the meadows and flow'ry walks of life, and taking a sniff at every shrub and carnation I meet with—nay I am often tempted by curiosity to get scrambling among the briars and thorns which are interspersed here and there, and which I assure your honour, we are all too apt to run our noses into, and thereby receive many a scratch.

I tell you what sir, I must peep here, then there, squint over the right shoulder, look over the left, and, indeed, endeavour to see every thing that is going forward—'tis my way, which made me remark that women are like birds, monstrously like peacocks, generally dragging a long tail behind of which they are not a little proud, though often half an inch of mud.—'Tis the fashion, sir.—They are like pidgeons—fond of billing and cooing.—They are like magpies—often chattering, and making a great deal of noise without rhyme or reason.—In short, they are like any thing you choose to compare them to, in some respects, being so changeable, fickle, and variegated.—But my dearly beloved reader, with your permission we will leave those bird-like companions, and walk on a little further, and I hope we shall (barring accidents, &c.) reach Ranelagh e're twelve o'clock.—I mean midnight.—This is a place of fashionable resort, mostly frequented by those kind of beings who are at a loss how to spend their time, who lay in bed most of the day, and to be in the ton, set up all night. As you my dear friend, Quiz, was never here, let me intreat you to lay a restraint upon all your your sensitive faculties, seeing, tasting, feeling, hearing, &c.—as, mayhap you may find such an attack upon those, as you never before experienced.

Consider Quiz, says I, we come here to observe, remark, and be amused; not to feast, or beastify ourselves by intoxication; therefore, as we are a little fatigued with our long walk, let us sit down in this box, and take a view of the stage of action, and the actors in the piece. Here's a great variety my boy—all in different characters, not two alike in the whole dramatis personæ.

Do observe that old gentleman in a brown coat, and scratch wig, that's Farmer Bushel, lately come from a distant part of the country to treat his wife and daughter with a view of great London, and some of its great wonders. Observe their looks and actions—with wond'ring eyes—open mouth, and looks of amazement—hear what he says? "Dang it, Betty, what a woundy vine please this here be—here's all the wordle and his wife, as a body may zay.—Why wone woud wonder where the dickens they all comed vrom, why I never zeed the like in all my born days.—Luk-a-dazy, varmer Thomas, says dame, how can you tawk zo, bevore all these here vine gentlevolks. Squire Hareum's hall is no more to compare to this here place, than our best room is to the pig-sty, and I did use to think that was a palace, and our parson's daughters and squire's sisters be no more to compare to the parcel of dutchesses and princesses that is now here, than my daughter Polly is to a gypsey, they be all so mortrageous grand.

Ah Betty, says farmer, thee dos'nt know what's what, they be nothing but painted Jazables, for if ya was to zee um to morrow morning you woud'nt knaw um again, as very likely they may have no gown to their backs, or cap to their heads—but here the poor farmer was stopt short, missing his watch from his pocket, but, says he, "I may as well look for a needle in a bottle of hay" as for my lost watch. Come Betty let us be off bevore tis worser, for vear we may lose our heads.

Well, Quiz, what think you of those actors?—they are natural performers, says Quiz, who being long used to one cast, know not how to change characters, though performing in a very different piece.

What a medley of mortals here is, of all sizes, countries, trades, and professions, and to string them as a boy does bird's eggs.—Here are

Bucks und blades,
Unvirtuous maids;
Cooks and scullions,
Jews and trullions;
Turks and tartars,
Coachmen, carters;
Dutchmen, Frenchmen,
Lawyers, benchmen;
Tradesmen, squires,
Knaves and lyars;
Old and young
Together strung;
Lawyer's clerks,
Barbaric sparks;
Blustering bullies,
Pimping cullies;
Cobling wights,
Horrid frights;
Undertakers,
Mantua-makers;
God's forsakers,
Midnight breakers;
Thief, thieftakers;
Ratling, bawling,
Waiters calling;
Scaldings, clearing,
Cursing, swearing;
Ogling, grinning,
Youths a sinning;
Jostling, squeezing,
Wooing, teazing;

 Billing,

Billing, cooing,
How doe doing.

'Tis a revival of Babylon I'd venture to swear,
Such confusion of tongues here abound,
With such phizzes, and quizzes would make an owl stare,
As they saunter it round and round.

Bawling, calling, and cursing the waiters for not performing impossibilities, in accommodating all at once.—Poor devils who are obliged to bear the insults of some impertinent puppies, who to shew their ignorance and insignificance, themselves vainly supposing it consequential authority, thus tyrannize over every one when they have an opportunity.

See in this place many sacrifice happiness at the shrine of pleasure. Innumerable are its votaries.—Inconsiderate mortals, who thus in hunting for pleasure lose the road to happiness, but see how they toil and labour in walking three or four miles to this place, sitting up 'till day-light in the morning—alternately experiencing the evening dews, nocturnal damps, and confined breathing rebreathed air, impregnated with a thousand, or ten thousand different effluvia, from lamps and fires, asthmatic, cancerous and putrid lungs—tramping round and round this rotunda like so many mules in a mill, and to add to, or compleat this scene of pleasure, walking home four or five miles with aching legs, aching head, and aching heart—fatigued in body, and disordered in mind, and this sir, and similar scenes is called an evenings amusement, or taking pleasure.

LITTLE B.

READING, and READING RACES.

THE town of READING so famous for its number of converts to methodism, the inveteracy of party, and its excellent spirit of trade has made another faint effort to regain its establishment in the SPORTING WORLD, but without effect. The late RACE savoured more of burlesque, than of BRILLIANCY, and the company barely exceeded the shew of a field preacher's congregation. Four horses only entered for the three days, and one of the two that ran on the first, (entered the field in flannels) obligingly broke down in running the first heat, to the mortification of what few were brought together upon the occasion. Not a SPORTSMAN of the least celebrity to be seen on the grounds; not a bet of a single guinea; not an aspiration of MIRTH to be heard, nor a family of eminence gracing the spot, as even "a poor epitome" of former greatness. Thus has TAXATION made beggars of us all, and even the canting plausibility of religious affectation, cannot command success, and insure itself from the calamitous vortex of MINISTERIAL sterility.

THE FEAST OF WIT; OR,
SPORTSMAN'S HALL.

A GENTLEMAN once in company happening to pronounce the word curiosity, "curosity," was immediately taken up by a pedant then present, exclaiming, "Good God, sir, why you murder your own language!" "By no means," replied the other, "I only knocked one I out.

In the neighbourhood of Hampton, a clergyman, lately coming out of

of church with his congregation, was asked by one of them (who had been asleep during the sermon) how long he might be composing his discourse; when the Curate replied "about as long, sir, as it composed you." Which occasioned a friendly laugh, and an immediate invitation to dinner—cheerfully accepted on both sides.

The Leeds and Liverpool Canal Company, lately employed a Common Councilman of the City of London as their agent to sell their PARBOLD coals. The learned citizen had in consequence notified over his door, to the great surprise of his neighbours, "Real Par-boiled Coals sold here."

A gentleman was lately defending cock-fighting against cruelty, saying it was their nature, "At least," replied his opponent, "you must confess they are spurred on to it."

LAW DICTIONARY.

A gentleman lately applied to a friend, to inform him who was the best counsel on a certain circuit where he had a cause to be tried. "Why really," said his friend, "there are but too clever fellows upon that circuit. I don't happen to recollect their names but you can't mistake them. The one is all law and no jaw, and the other is all jaw and no law."

TO YOUNG AUTHORS.

Mrs. B——, desired Dr. Johnson to give his opinion on a new work of her's; adding, that if it would not do, she begged him to tell her, for she had other irons in the fire, and, in case of its not being likely to succeed, she could bring out something else; upon which the doctor, having turned over the work, said, "Then, madam, I would advise you to put this where your irons are."

A PHÆNOMENON.

A lady advertising for a place, amongst other extraordinary qualifications, mentions one, at which the married sceptics will certainly shake their heads. She says, "that she is perfect mistress of her own tongue."

A gentleman and his son being at a convivial dinner, where the latter was observed by the former to drink somewhat too freely, was asked by him if he was a-dry, that he drank so often. No, sir, replied he, it is to prevent my being a-dry.

IRISH SIMPLICITY.

A young woman of Dublin, who was apprehensive of some unhappy effects from an illicit amour which she had for some time carried on with a Dutch sailor, mentioned her situation to a friend of her's, who advised her to place her future offspring to the account of her master, as being the richer man of the two. "I was thinking of that," replied the fair one, "but then you know the child will discover all when it begins to speak Dutch."

COMBAT between the HORSE and the LION.

(See plate annexed.)

A Nobleman, in the early part of the reign of Lewis XV. having a very vicious horse, which none of the grooms or servants would ride, several of them having been thrown, and one killed, asked leave of his majesty to have him him turned loose into the menagerie against one of the largest lions. The king readily consented, and the animal on a certain day was conducted there. Soon after the arrival of the horse, the door of the den was drawn up, and the lion, with great state and majesty, marched slowly to the mouth of it, when seeing his antagonist, he set up a tremendous roar. The horse immediately startled, and fell back: his ears were erected; his main raised; his eyes sparkled; and something like a general convulsion seemed to agitate his whole frame. After the first emotions of fear had subsided, the horse retired into a corner of the menagerie, where having directed his heels toward the lion, and having reared his head back over his left shoulder, he watched with extreme eagerness the motions of his enemy. The lion, who presently quitted the den, sidled about for more than a minute, as if meditating the mode of attack, when having sufficiently prepared himself for the combat, he made a sudden spring at the horse, which defended itself, by striking his adversary a most violent blow on the chest.

The lion instantly retreated, groaned, and seemed for several minutes inclined to give up the contest, when recovering from the painful effects of the blow, he returned again to the charge with unabated violence. The mode of preparation in this second attack was the same as the first. He sidled from one side of the menagerie to the other, for a considerable time, seeking a favourable opportunity to seize upon his prey; during all which time the horse still preserved the same posture, and still kept his head erected, and turned over his shoulder. The lion, at length, gave a second spring with all the strength and velocity he could exercise, when the horse caught him with his hoof on the under jaw, which he fractured.

Having sustained a second, and a more severe repulse than the former, the lion retreated to his den as well as he was able, apparently in the greatest agony, moaning all the way in a most lamentable manner.

What became of the lion afterward I never heard; but the horse was soon obliged to be shot, as no one ever dared to approach the ground where he was kept.

The distressed DEER STEALER and his FAMILY, taken from Colman's Iron Chest. The Scene in the New Forest and its Borders.

ACT I.—SCENE I.

The inside of RAWBOLD's (the DEER STEALER's) COTTAGE. Several children, squalid and beggarly, discovered in different parts of the room: some asleep. DAME RAWBOLD seated, leaning over the embers of the fire. BARBARA seated near her. SAMSON standing in the front of the stage. A narrow stair-case in the back scene. A taper burning. The whole scene exhibits poverty and wretchedness.

GLEE.

SAMSON.

FIVE times, by the taper's light,
The hour-glass I have turn'd to night,

First Boy—Where's father?

Samson—He's gone out to roam:
If he have luck,
He'll bring a buck,
Upon his lusty shoulders, home.

The different voices.

Home! home!
He comes not home!
Hark! from the woodland vale below,
The distant clock sounds, dull and slow!
Bombe! bombe! bombe!

Sam.

Sam.—Five o'clock, and father not yet returned from New Forest! An he come not shortly, the sun will rise, and roast the venison on his shoulders.—Sister Barbara!—Well, your rich men have no bowels for us lowly! they little think, while they are gorging on the fat haunch of a goodly buck, what fatigues we poor honest souls undergo in stealing it.—Why, sister Barbara!

Bar.—I am here brother Samson, (getting up).

Sam.—Here! marry, out upon you for an idle baggage! why, you crawl like a snail.

Bar.—I prithee, now, do not chide me, Samson.

Sam.—'Tis my humour. I am father's head man in his poaching. The rubs I take from him, who is above me, I hand down to you, who are below me. 'Tis the way of office—where every miserable devil domineers it over the next more miserable devil that's under him. You may scold sister Margery, an you will—she's your younger by a twelvemonth.

Bar.—Truly brother, I would not make any one unhappy, for the world. I am content to do what I can to please; and to mind the house.

Sam.—Truly, a weighty matter! Thou art e'en ready to hang thyself, for want of something to while away time. What hast thou much more to do than to trim the faggots, nurse thy mother, boil the pot, patch our jackets, kill the poultry, cure the hogs, feed the pigs, and comb the children?

Bar.—Many might think that no small charge, Samson.

Sam.—A mere nothing.—While father and I (bate us but the mother and children) have the credit of purloining every single thing that you have the care of. We are up early, and down late, in the exercise of our industry.

Bar.—I wish father and you would give up the calling.

Sam.—No—there is one keen argument to prevent us.

Bar.—What's that, brother?

Sam.—Hunger. Wouldst have us be rogues, and let our family starve? Give up poaching and deer-stealing! Oons! dost think we have no conscience? Yonder sits mother, poor soul—old, helpless, and crazy.

Bar.—Alas! brother, 'tis heart-aching to look upon her. This very time three years she got her maim. It was a piteous tempest.

Sam.—Aye—'twas rough weather.

Bar.—I never pass the old oak that was shivered that night, in the storm, but I am ready to weep. It remembers me of the time when all our poor family went to ruin.

Sam.—Pish—no matter: The cottage was blown down—the barn fired—father undone—Well, landlords are flinty hearted—no help! what then? We live, don't we? (sullenly).

Bar.—Troth, brother, very sadly. Father has grown desperate; all is fallen to decay. We live by pilfering on the Forest—and our poor mother distracted, and unable to look to the house. The rafter, which fell in the storm, struck so heavy upon her brain, I fear me, 'twill never again be settled.

Moth.—Children! Barbara! where's my eldest daughter? She is my darling.

Bar.—I am here, mother.

Sam.—Peace, fool! you know she's doating.

Moth.—Look to the cattle, Barbara! We must to market to-morrow. My husband's a rich man.

man. We thrive! we thrive! Ha, ha, ha,—oh!

Bar.—Oh brother! I cannot bear to see her thus—though, alas! we have long been used to it. The little ones too—scarce cloath'd—hungry—almost starving!—Indeed, we are a very wretched family.

Sam.—Hark! Methought I heard a tread.—Hist! be wary. We must not open in haste, for fear of surprises.

(A knock at the cottage door.)

DUET.

Samson—Who knocks at this dead hour?
Rawbold (without) A friend.
Samson.—How should we know,
A friend from foe?
A signal you must give.
Rawbold (without) Attend.

(Rawbold gives three knocks, which Samson counts, singing at intervals.)

Samson..—One, two, three!
'Tis he.
Give me the word we fixt to night,
'Tis Roebuck (in a whisper to Barbara.)
Rawbold (without.) Roebuck.
Samson. That is right,
Enter now by candle-light,
Rawbold.—Open now by candle-light.

Samson opens the door, and Rawbold enters.

Raw.—Bar the door. So, softly.

Sam.—What success, father?

Raw.—Good: my limbs ache for't.

Moth.—O brave husband! Welcome from the court. Thou shalt be made a knight; and I a lady. Ha! ha!

Raw.—Rest, rest, poor soul!—How you stand! (to Samson.) The chair, you gander.

Sam.—(to Barbara) Why, how you stand! the chair, you gander!

(They bring Rawbold a chair: he sits.)

Raw.—Here—take my gun—'tis unscrewed. The keepers are abroad. I had scarce time to get it in my pocket.

(He pulls the gun from a pocket under his coat, in three pieces, which Samson screws together, while they are talking.)

Fie! 'tis sharp work! Barbara, you jade, come hither.

Sam.—Barbara, you jade, come hither.

Raw.—Who bid thee chide her, lout! Kiss thy old father, wench. Kiss me I say.—So—why dost tremble? I am rough as a tempest. Evil fortune has blown my lowring nature into turbulence: but thou art a blossom that dost bend thy head so sweetly under my gusts of passion, 'tis pity they should e'er harm thee.

Bar.—Indeed, father, I am glad to see you safe returned.

Raw.—I believe thee. Take the keys. Go to the locker, in the loft, and bring me a glass to recruit me. (Barbara goes out.

Sam.—Well, father, and so——

Raw.—Peace.—I ha, shot a buck.

Sam.—O rare! Of all the sure aims on the borders of the New Forest, here, give me old Gilbert Rawbold; though I, who am his son, say it, that should not say it.—Where have you stow'd him, father?

Raw.—Under the furze, behind the hovel. Come night again, we will draw him in, boy. I have been watch'd.

Sam.—Watch'd! O, the pestilence! our trade will be spoiled if the Groom-Keepers be after us. The law will persecute us father.

Raw.—Do'st know Mortimer?

Sam.—What, Sir Edward Mortimer? Aye, sure. He is head keeper keeper of the foreſt. 'Tis he who has ſhut himſelf up in melancholy. Sees no rich, and does ſo much good to the poor.

Raw.—He has done me naught but evil. A gun cannot be carried on the border, here, but he has ſcent on't at a league's diſtance. He is a thorn to me. His ſcouts this night were after me—all on the watch. I'll be revenged.—I'll — So, the brandy. — Enter BARBARA, with the liquor.

Raw. — (after drinking) 'Tis right, ifaith!

Sam.—That 'tis I'll be ſworn; for I ſmuggled it myſelf. We do not live ſo near the coaſt for nothing.

ACT II.—SCENE I.

The ROBBERS of the NEW FOREST.

Enter Armſtrong and Orſon.

Arm. — GO to—I tell thee, Orſon, (as I have told thee more than once) thou art too ſanguinary.

Orſ.—And, I tell you, Captain Armſtrong — but always under favour, you being our leader—you are too humane.

Arm.—Humanity is ſcarcely counted a fault: if ſo, 'tis a fault on the right ſide.

Orſ.—Umph! perhaps not with us. We are robbers.

Arm.—And why ſhould robbers lack humanity? They who plunder moſt reſpect it as a virtue, and make a ſhew on't to guild their vices. Lawyers, phyſicians, placemen, all——all plunder and ſlay, but all pretend to humanity.

Orſ.—They are regulars, and plunder by licence.

Arm.—Then let us quacks ſet the regulars a better example.

Orſ.—This humanity, Captain, is a high horſe you are ever beſtride upon. Some day, mark my word, he'll fling you.

Arm.—Cruelty is a more dangerous beaſt:—When the rider's thrown, his brains are kick'd out, and no one pities him.

Orſ.—Like enough;—but your tough horſeman, who ventures boldly, is never diſmounted. When I am engaged in a deſperate chace, (as we are Captain,) I ſtick at nothing. I hate milk ſops.

Arm.—And love mutiny. Take heed, Orſon, I have before caution'd you not to glance at me.

Orſ. — I ſay nothing: but if ſome eſcape to inform againſt us, whom we have rob'd, 'tis none of my fault. Dead men tell no tales.

Arm. — Wretch! Speak that again, and you ſhall tell none. (holds a carbine to his head.)

Orſ. — Flaſh away! — I don't fear death.

Arm.—More ſhame for thee; for thou art unfit to meet it.

Orſ.—I know my trade. I ſet powder, ball, and rope, at defiance.

Arm. — Brute! You miſtake headſtrong inſenſibility for courage. Do not miſtake my horror of it for cowardice: for I, who ſhudder at cruelty, will fell your boldneſs to the earth, when I ſee you practice it. Submit.

Orſ.—I do. I know not what 'tis, but I have told you, often, there is ſomething about you awes me. I cannot tell —— I could kill twenty to your one.

Arm. — There 'tis. —— Thou wouldſt dart upon the weak unguarded man, like a tyger. A ferocious animal, whether crawling or erect, ever ſlinks from fair oppoſition.

Orſ. — My courage was never yet doubted, Captain.

Arm. — Your nerves, fool. Thou art a mere machine. Could I but give it motion, I would take take an oak from the foreſt, here, clap a flint into it for heart, and make as bold a fellow as thou art. Liſten to my orders.

Orſ.—I obey.

Arm. —Get thee to our den. Put on thy diſguiſe—then hie thee to the market town for proviſion, for our company. Here —— He is part of the ſpoil we took yeſter-night: ſee you bring an honeſt account of what you lay out. (giving money.)

Orſ.—My honour!——

Arm.—Well, I do not doubt thee, here. Our profeſſion is ſingular; it's followers do not cheat one another. You will not be back till duſk. See you fall not on any poor ſtraggling peaſant, as you return.

Orſ.—I would feign encounter the ſolitary man, who is ſometimes wandering by night about the foreſt. He is rich.

Arm. Not for your life. 'Tis Sir Edward Mortimer, the head keeper. Touch him not; 'tis too near home. Beſides, he is no object for plunder. I have watch'd him, at midnight, ſtealing from his lodge, to wander like one crazed. He is good, too, to the poor; and ſhould walk unmoleſted by charity's charter. 'Twere pity that he who adminiſters to neceſſity, all day, ſhould be rifled by neceſſity at night. An thou ſhouldſt meet him, I charge thee ſpare him.

Orſ.—I muſt, if it be your order. This ſparing doctrine will go nigh, at laſt, to ſtarve all the thieves. When a man takes to the trade of a wolf, he ſhould not go like a lamb to his buſineſs. (Exit.

Arm—This fellow is a downright villain: Harden'd and relentleſs. I have felt, in my penury, the world trample on me. It has driven me to take that, deſperately, which wanting I ſhould ſtarve. Death! my ſpirit cannot brook to ſee a ſleek knave walk negligently by his fellow in miſery, and ſuffer him to rot. I will wrench that comfort from him which he will not beſtow.— But nature puts a bar:—Let him adminiſter to my wants, and paſs on:—I have done with him.

The KNOWING COQUETTE taken in.

Brighton, Sept. 2.

To the EDITORS of the SPORTING MAGAZINE.

GENTLEMEN,

THE watering places are now very full, and the metropolis of courſe very empty. Coquettes and gameſters never fail plying here; the firſt to win your hearts, the ſecond your money; but the knowing-ones are ſometimes taken in at both games.

Clarinda, who has ſhone as one of the moſt brilliant figures at Brighton this ſummer, and is ſuppoſed to have had more captives in her train than ever Julius Cæſar could command, has at length fallen a victim to her credulity. The Count Baſſet of this place, whoſe dreſs and appearance juſtly entitled him to his nominal rank, enticed Clarinda to a party at piquet, when he won of her upwards of 500l. She had not ſo much caſh with her, yet was loath to have her character expoſed, where ſhe had ſo dazzled and conquered. The Count took this opportunity of paying his addreſſes in form, hinted that the trifle in queſtion was no object, that he was aſtoniſhed that ſhe had abſented herſelf from the rooms for two days, that the cauſe ſhould never tranſpire from him, and

and begged ſhe would reſume her wonted gaiety; but Clarinda had fretted herſelf ſo much on account of her loſs, that ſhe looked as ſhe expreſſed it, miſerably; and ſhe judged it would be yielding a great part of her empire to the other toaſts, if ſhe appeared in public at this time. The Count was happy to find her reſolution was fixed to abſent herſelf till ſhe had recovered her uſual chearfulneſs; he, by this means, had all her company to himſelf, and he profited of the opportunity to recommend his ſuit. She began ſeriouſly to dread, that her beauty was upon the decline. The Count was an agreeable man, and had the power of perſuaſion in great perfection: he paſſed for a man of conſiderable fortune, and, in one ſenſe of the word, certainly was ſuch: in fine, he played his cards ſo well on the occaſion, that in a few days he obtained her conſent, and it was agreed to take a trip to Bath to conſummate their nuptials. The honey-moon is not yet over, but the Count has already ſucked the ſweets of her fortune, which has paid very uſurious intereſt for the 500l. She has alſo the mortification to find, that he has connexion with another female, by whom he has ſeveral children; and moſt probably a few weeks will produce a ſeparation between the Count and Clarinda, when ſhe will have time to lament her folly, and regret her having refuſed many good matches, becauſe her pride would not let her deſcend to any hand below nobility. She has now caught a Count and a Tartar at the ſame time; but would willingly relinquiſh her title to move in the more humble ſphere of Clarinda.

I am, Gentlemen,

A BYE-STANDER.

ANECDOTE of a FARMER, near CHELMSFORD.

THE late Lord Waltham's table was annually ſupplied with turkies and poults of the fine black India breed, from the ſmall farm of a tenant of his in the neighbourhood. The farmer, however, neglecting to carry them as uſual to New Hall, occaſioned Lord and Lady Waltham to expreſs ſome ſurprize at the cauſe; and the firſt day my Lord met him in his walks, he interrogated him on the ſubject, adding that he hoped the foxes (thoſe enemies to the feathered race) had not cut off the friendly ſupplies which had hitherto reached his larder. The farmer artleſsly replied, "To tell you the truth, my Lord, woive and I rooaſted one by chance, and woundily liken'd the reliſh on it, that we have yeaten almoaſt every one of them, and never mean to ſell another." Although my Lord was pleaſed at the farmer's ſimplicity and goodneſs of taſte, yet he next day ordered him to quit his farm, or pay twenty pounds a year additional rent, unleſs he and his wife would be content to ſhare the fowls at his landlord's table which they ever after did, to the no ſmall diverſion of the company to whom the ſtory was always told.

NED Scamper was born to a good eſtate, which he determined to improve, and therefore, as ſoon as he became of age, mortgaged part of his land to buy a mare and a ſtallion, and bred horſes for the courſe. He was at firſt very ſucceſsful, and gained ſeveral of the king's plates at the expence of little more than double ble their value. At last, he discovered that victory brought him more honour than profit; resolving, therefore, to be rich, as well as illustrious, he replenished his pocket by another mortgage, became on a sudden a daring better, and resolving not to trust a jockey with his fortune, rode his horse himself, distanced two of his competitors the first heat, and at last won the race, by pressing his horse on a descent to full speed, at the hazard of his neck. His estate was thus repaired, and some friends, who had no souls, advised him to give over; but Ned now knew the way to riches, and therefore, without caution, increased his expences. From that hour, he talked and dreamed of nothing but a horse-race, and rising soon to the summit of equestrian reputation, he was constantly expected on every course, divided all his time between lords and jockies; and, as the unexperienced regulated their bets by his example, gained a great deal of money by laying openly upon one horse, and secretly on another. Ned was now so sure of growing rich, that he involved his estate in a third mortgage, borrowed money of all his friends, and risqued his whole fortune upon Miss Slamerkin. He mounted with beating heart, started fair, and won the first heat; but in the second, as he was pushing against the foremost of his rivals, his girth broke, his shoulder was dislocated, and before he was dismissed by the surgeons, two bailiffs fastened upon him, and he saw Newmarket no more.

A New Publication.

A Very ingenious treatise on all the studs of Europe, has been lately published in Germany, translated from the French of M. Fluzard, professor of the veterinarian school, and member of several academies. The author remarks, that France herself (prior to the revolution) very often found herself destitute of horses, when in the greatest need of them. He says, that, in 1701, administration were obliged to have horses imported from abroad to the amount of a hundred million of livres, (24 to a pound sterling,) he has calculated, that England, in fourteen years, had exported 21,348 head of horses; and the duchy of Wirtemberg 8612, in the space of six years. He mentions the useful and manly custom of having four societies of real gentlemen in Spain, who superintend the breeding of horses. Their motto is very expressive, Pro republica est, dum ludere videmur. He speaks of the mules and the jumars, (another kind of mules,) or a horse got by a bull on a she-ass, by a bull on a mare, by an ass on a cow; in this manner he establishes four different races of animals unknown in England, but very much esteemed and valued abroad. Some of these species are exceeding strong, very swift, and will carry from seven to eight hundred weight. The author of the above furnishes the new Encyclopædia with all the veterinarian articles.

The Insensible Sportsman.

To the Editors of the Sporting Magazine.

Gentlemen,

ABOUT this time twelvemonth, I was, against my inclination, married to one of the greatest sportsmen in as great a porting county as any in England, land. I was immediately raviſhed from dear, dear London, to an old manſion-houſe ſituated between two woods; was forced from the opera and the maſquerade, to live among the yelping of hounds, the noiſe of horns, and eternal debates about horſes. How diſagreeable this was to me, you may eaſily imagine, and how affecting the joys of matrimony were, when the huſband and wife had ſuch different notions of living. He loved the country, I languiſhed for the town; I hated ſolitude, and he aſſemblies. He could not endure quadrille, nor I backgammon; I liked to lie a-bed till ten, and he was always up by three or four. Notwithſtanding theſe natural antipathies, as I was his wife, I tacitly conform'd, and did all in my power to be an agreeable companion. He ſeemed mighty fond for a ſhort time, but the hunting ſeaſon being begun, he had other buſineſs than to regard a wife: he ſoon deſerted me to follow a hare, and left the ſafe embraces of my arms, to venture his neck in purſuit of a fox; this neglect of me increaſed, as the ſeaſon more and more advanced, and I had ſoon the torture to ſee myſelf rivalled by his hounds and horſes: Ringwood was oftener kiſſed than his ſpouſe, and Whitefoot had more of his converſation. Even a rainy day made no alteration; for when he could not be in the field, he was either in the kennel or the ſtable, conſulting with the groom, or giving orders to the huntſman; and if he was within the houſe, he was drinking with ſome of his brother ſportſmen, or damning the weather, or, in a ſullen ill-nature, finding fault with the whole family. Such was my ſituation all laſt winter ſuch I expect this, and ſuch in ſome reſpect or other, is the hard uſage of all the ſportſmen's wives in Great Britain.

Now, Gentlemen, as my huſband regularly reads your Magazine, I think it incumbent on you to write a paper in ſome future Number, that may tend to reclaim ſuch a wild ſavage, and give him a hint, that a woman is preferable to a fox; by which you will confer a favour on

Your humble ſervant,

LYDIA RANGER.

SLEEP WALKING.

THE latter end of laſt month, a woman, of the name of Betty Williams, in Temple-ſtreet, Briſtol, who had been accuſtomed to walk in her ſleep, got out of bed, between the hours of eleven and twelve, (unknown to another woman who ſlept with her,) went to the window, which was very low, and lifting up the ſaſh, fell into the ſtreet. She was immediately taken to the infirmary: amputation was found requiſite above one of her knees; ſhe languiſhed in great agony for two days after, when ſhe expired.

It is wonderful that this unaccountable habit is not more frequently the occaſion of melancholy accidents. On the contrary, perſons liable to it have often been known to walk through very intricate and dangerous places with the greateſt ſafety.

The following remarkable account of a ſleep-walker, may, perhaps, not be unacceptable to ſome of our readers. It is taken from the Vignuel Marvillian of Noel Bonaventure d'Argonne:—

"One of my friends," ſays the author, "having invited me to

 paſs

pafs a few days in the country, I accepted his offer, and met with much good company, and feveral perfons of diftinction; among them there was an Italian gentleman, whofe name was Agoftini Fotari, who walked in his fleep, and performed all the ordinary actions of life as well as when awake.

"He did not appear to be above thirty years of age, very thin, dark complexion, melancholy appearance, of a folid penetrating genius, capable of comprehending the moft abftract fciences. The approach of his derangement was generally at the increafe of the moon, and ftronger during autumn and winter than fpring and fummer. I had a ftrange curiofity to fee what they faid of him. I communicated my wifhes to his valet; he told me wonderful things, and promifed to inform me when his mafter performed this pleafant fcene.

"One evening, near the end of October, we fat down after fupper to play at cards. Signior Agoftini was of the party, but foon retired to bed. About eleven o'clock, his valet came to inform us that his mafter was inflicted, if he wifhed to fee him. I obferved him fome time with a candle in my hand; he was fleeping on his back, and flept with his eyes open, but they were fteadily fixed; this, according to the valet's account, was a certain fign of approaching derangement. I felt his hands, they were very cold, and his pulfe fo languid, that it feemed as if his blood did not circulate. Near about midnight, Signior Agoftini violently pulled the curtains of his bed; he took his belt, which hung on the bed pofts, but from which his fword had been taken, for fear of an accident. Thus dreffed, he made feveral turns round his chamber, then went towards the fire, and feated himfelf in an arm chair.

"A fhort time after this, he went into a clofet, where his portmanteau was; this he fearched a long time, turned every thing out, replaced them in good order, and put the key in his pocket, from whence he took a letter and placed it on the mantle-piece. He then went to the chamber-door, opened it, and defcended the ftairs; when got to the bottom, one of us jumped with great force; this feemed to frighten him, but he redoubled his pace.

"His valet defired us to walk flowly, and not to fpeak, becaufe when the noife which is made mixes with his dream, he becomes furious, and runs very faft, as though he were purfued.

"Signior Agoftini now traverfed the court yard, which was very fpacious, and went to the ftable: he entered it, careffed his horfe, bridled, and wanted to faddle it; but not finding the faddle in its ufual place, he appeared much difturbed, like a perfon out of his fenfes. He mounted the horfe, and gallopped to the door of the houfe; it was fhut. He difmounted, took a ftone, and ftruck very forcibly againft one of the pannels. After feveral ufelefs efforts to open the door, he led his horfe towards a pond, which was on the other fide of the court-yard, let it drink, then led it to a poft, and came back to the houfe in a tranquil ftate.

"To the noife which the fervants made in the kitchen he was very attentive, went towards the door, and placed his ear to the key-hole. On a fudden he went to a parlour, where there was a billiard table; there he ftruck the balls, and put himfelf in all the different poftures poſtures which people, who play the game, find it neceſſary to aſſume ſometimes. From thence he went to an harpſichord, on which he played tolerably well, but it ſeemed to diſorder him very much. At laſt, after two hours exerciſe, he returned to his chamber, and threw himſelf, dreſſed as he was, upon the bed; where we found him, at nine o'clock next morning, in the poſture we left him.

"In theſe paroxyſms he always ſlept nine or ten hours. The valet informed us there was but two ways of rouſing him; one, to tickle the bottom of his feet; the other, to ſound a horn, or play a trumpet at his ears."

Matrimonial Traffic.

Singular Customs in the Village of Broek, in North Holland.

A VERY ingenious traveller, (Mr. Pratt,) who has made a tour through the Netherlands, thus deſcribes the cuſtom of the people of North Holland:

"The inhabitants of Broek," ſays he, "are chiefly perſons who have retired from buſineſs, or who are connected with ſome commercial houſes in Amſterdam. They are extremely rich; and it is here that the practice ſtill prevails amongſt the wealthy peaſantry of diſpoſing of their children in marriage by weight of metal. A countryman dreſſed in a coarſe blue doublet is the father of a young man, who is to be ſold in wedlock: he meets the buyer, another countryman, who is the parent of the girl, that is to be bought. While the parties thus to be diſpoſed of, are trying to become agreeable to one another, or, at leaſt, to accommodate, the old folks are making the bargain for them, over a pipe of tobacco.

"Will you give your ſon to my daughter with ſo many barrels of gold?

"I cannot.

"She cannot be afforded for leſs.

"Well, I will give it.

"Then take her.—I will cart the caſh to-morrow.

"Done. A match.

"The buſineſs is done, and they are as happy, at leaſt, as money can make them."

Our author further adds, that "the painful neatneſs within the houſes of this beautiful villag, and alſo in the ſtreets, have been productive of the following anecdote:—The ancient vicar of Broek being dead, and much lamented, his ſucceſſor tried every method that a worthy prieſt could think of, to repair the loſs, not only as to his paſtoral duty, but as to ſociety. 'I would fain gain your good will, and conciliate your eſteem, my dear pariſhioners,' ſaid he, 'How is it I fail?'

"The want of confidence in the inhabitants, made the new vicar unhappy: and yet for many months, he could get no one to aſſign a reaſon for it. At length, an old man, one of his congregation, after ſome heſitation, ſpoke as follows: 'I will tell you, Mr. Vicar. You are a fine ſcholar: you talk Greek and Latin: your diſcourſes are very learned; but you mount the reading deſk and pulpit in your ſhoes, after having walked through the ſtreets. Your predeceſſor always put on a pair of ſlippers, which are ſtill left for your uſe in the conſiſtory. You know, now the cauſe of the ſhyneſs and diſaffection of the pariſh: and you know alſo the way to remove it.'

"The vicar took the hint, and ever ever after adopting the slippers, very soon became as great a favourite as the good man he succeeded."

On the Schemes for Tontines which have been offered to the Public.

To the Editors of the Sporting Magazine.

Gentlemen,

PERCEIVING the disadvantages under which the public gamed by these tontines, it was my design to expose the case by suitable calculations; but your correspondent, H. B. having, in your first vol. page 152, done it to my hands, I have only now to state some facts relative to those schemes, in order to shew how greatly subscribers are wronged.

The managers of one of these tontines, have lately divided their capital. Each subscriber paid 6s. 6d. per quarter, together with 6d. per quarter to the managers for their trouble, which together in seven years (the term for which the tontine was established) amounted to 9l. 16s.

Each of the surviving subscribers received, on the division of the capital, 10l. 2s. So that 6s. only was received by each subscriber for the interest of his money, and the benefit arising from survivorship.

Let us now endeavour to calculate the sum drawn from the public by the projectors of these schemes, for the trouble of management. I knew of six of these plans, two in London, two in Bristol, and two in Yorkshire. There might be more, but the evil will appear sufficiently extensive, if there were not. The agent of one of the societies in Bristol, boasted, by public advertisement, that its subscribers amounted to more than 120,000; but taking the average of the six societies to be 80,000 each, the whole of subscribers to these plans would be 480,000 persons. These paid each 2s. per annum for management, which in seven years would produce 336,000l. but to this sum must be added six months interest of the whole capital produced by the subscriptions, because the managers did not divide till six months after the expiration of the term, on the pretence of settling their books. The produce of 48,000 subscriptions, at 9l. 16s. each, is 4,704,000l. The half years interest on which, at five per cent, is 117,600l. making, with the money received by the projectors for the article of management, the enormous sum of 453,600l.

I need not dwell on this statement. It is accurate, and no words can add to its eloquence. I shall be happy if this paper, save a portion of your numerous readers, who may be tempted to subscribe to some of these schemes, from being a prey to their delusive promises.

I remain, Gentlemen,
Your's, &c.

A Curious Amusement.

THE Thracians, as Selecus in Athenæus (lib. 4. cap. 14) informs us, had a custom of playing at hanging, for the diversion of their guests, which was done in this manner:—a large stone was placed in the middle of the room, over which a rope hung perpendicularly from the beam above. Several of them cast lots who should hang. The man on whom whom the lot fell, mounted the ſtone with a ſharp bill hook in his hand; when he had properly faſtened the rope about his neck, one of the company went forward, puſhed the ſtone from under his feet, and left him hanging. If in this ſituation he was dexterous enough to cut the rope, all was well, otherwiſe he continued capering till he was hanged and dead, to the great entertainment of the ſpectators.

Singular METHOD of COURTSHIP among the PORTUGUESE.

From Murphy's Travels in Portugal.

"THE Portugueſe ladies poſſeſs many amiable qualities; they are chaſte, modeſt, and extremely affectionate to their kindred. No woman goes out of doors without the permiſſion of her huſband or parents. To avoid all ſuſpicion, men, even though relations, are not allowed to viſit their apartments, or to ſit beſide them in public places. Hence their lovers are ſeldom gratified with a ſight of them, except in the churches; here they make ſigns and ſignals:

"Addreſs and compliment by viſion,
"Make love and court by intuition."
HUDIBRAS.

"Notwithſtanding the watchful eye of the duenna, the lovers contrive to exchange billet-doux, and that in ſo ſubtle a manner, that none can perceive it whoſe breaſt glows not with a ſimilar flame. The little boys who attend at the altar, are often the meſſengers on theſe occaſions. When one of theſe wingleſs cupids receives the letter, he makes his way through the audience till he approaches the fair one, then he throws himſelf on his knees, repeating his Ave maris ſtella, and beating his breaſt; after finiſhing his ejaculations and croſſing his forehead, he falls on his face and hands, and fervently kiſſes the ground; in the mean time he conveys the letter under the lady's drapery, and brings back another.

"At other times when the lovers are coming out of the church, their hands meet as it were by chance in the holy water font; by this means they exchange billets, and enjoy the delectable pleaſure of preſſing each other's fingers.

"Various are the contrivances to which they are compelled to reſort, in order to elude ſuſpicion; and in no part of their lives do they evince more prudence than during their courtſhip. Their natural diſpoſition to ſecrecy is the means of their continuing for years under the impreſſion of the tender paſſion; and they muſt have fallen victims to it, were it not that refined, that virtuous love which Guevara deſcribes.

"Arde y no quema; alumbra y no danna; quema y no conſume, reſplende y no laſtima, purifica y no abraſa; y aun calienta y no congoxu.

"It glows, but ſcorches not; it enlightens, but hurts not; it conſumes not, though it burns; it dazzles not, though it glitters; it refines without deſtroying; and though it be hot, yet it is not painful.

"Marriage-feaſts are attended with vaſt expence: the reſources of the lower claſs are often exhauſted in the preparations made on theſe occaſions. The nuptial bed-chamber is ornamented in the moſt coſtly manner, with ſilks, brocades, and flowers; even the wedding-ſheets are trimmed with the fineſt lace."

Lottery Decision.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH.

IN the sittings in Easter Term, before Lord Kenyon, came on a cause, Robinson, v. Blizard. These parties were both waiters at the London Tavern, and this action was brought by the plaintiff against the defendant to recover a share of the 20,000l. prize in the last State-Lottery. A brother waiter was called, who said that about a week before the commencement of the last Lottery, he and Blizard tossed up for one-sixteenth share of a ticket. The price was then 1l. The plaintiff came in immediately after they had tossed up, when the witness said to him, " Blizard has beat me in one-sixteenth, do you try him." Upon this the plaintiff and defendant tossed up for another one-sixteenth, and Blizard beat him likewise. The defendant gained them both. Some time after this the witness made a proposition that they should join and toss up for another one sixteenth, which was to be for the benefit of all the three. The tossing was to ascertain who was to be at the expence of purchasing these shares. Blizard wished to hold a share equal to the other two, to which they immediately objected; but the witness afterwards gave it up, as not thinking it worth while to have any dispute about it. But the plaintiff did not say that he gave it up. He did not know what numbers were purchased. There were two blanks, and the third was one-sixteenth of the 20,000l. prize. The witness had sold his interest in these shares before the tickets were drawn, to a person of the name of Bird, for a guinea, and had received a share of that money. It also appeared that the plaintiff had given up any interest he had in these shares, and it was not till several days after the 20,000l. prize was drawn that he set up a claim to any part of it. Plaintiff nonsuited.

HE is enamoured of the charms, and deep in the mysteries of play; that is, he is so fond of riches, which a good judge (Sallust) tells us, " nemo bonus unquam concupavit," of riches he is so over-fond, that he is quite miserable if denied a daily chance of being stript to beggary. Greater professions of friendship can no man make, than this arch-promiser; greater proofs of the contrary can no man give. He never did a favour that proved barren to his own designs, but he sent a curse after it. All his kindnesses are artificial flies! if nothing is caught they are pocketed again. " Hook him or hang him," is a favourite maxim of his own coining. He smiles, indeed, with great complacency, on a crowded levee of devoted friends; with no less than on a good hand of cards; and his hope from both is just the same; that is, so to play them off so as to win the game; that done, if humour or interest bids, he throws them aside as a foul pack, and calls for new; to shuffle and cheat, and play tricks with as before. He considers fools as trumps with which he is sure to win. If there are no fools to be taken in, he makes a pretty good hand of it, with a knave of the right suit. If he is so unlucky as not to be blessed with either, he gives out, and for that time plays no more; for without a good hand, a bad heart is insupportable. But prosperity sooths remorse, and lays conscience asleep. This is one that knows the world, which which generally means one that knows not God. He never thought of that great final ſtake, with regard to which, he that honeſtly but deſires is ſure to win; and he that plays foul the moſt dexterouſly is ſure to be undone.

TRIAL of JOHN SELLERS, WILLIAM FOOTNER, and ELIZABETH JONES, charged with the wilful Murder of Mr. THOMAS YATES.

Old Bailey, Sept. 16.

JOHN Sellers, William Footner, and Elizabeth Jones, were put to the bar, the former upon the charge of having wilfully and maliciouſly wounded Mr. Thomas Yates, with a piſtol ball, of which wound he died, and the two latter for aiding and abetting in the ſaid murder.

The evidence adduced on the trial of the above perſons, was nearly the ſame as took place before the magiſtrates and the coroner's jury, (ſee our Magazine for laſt month, p. 233). That which was new on the trial, was a variation in the evidence of the ſervant, Mary Thompſon, who ſwore before the magiſtrates that Mr. Yates puſhed away the piſtol with his hand when preſented by Sellers, but contradicted herſelf in this particular on the trial, having ſworn that Mr. Yates did not touch the piſtol. It came out more ſtrongly likewiſe, that Yates had behaved in a vindictive quarrelſome manner in the houſe.

Sellers, in his defence, denied all intention of killing Mr. Yates, but that the piſtol went off, owing to Yates taking hold of it.

Miſs Jones, in her defence, went into the particulars of her firſt engagement with the late Mr. Richard Yates, and of her performing at the Birmingham theatre, of the will in her favour, and of the turbulent behaviour of the deceaſed, diſclaiming all idea of his murder, and that ſhe would have willingly reſigned every ſhilling of the property to ſave Mr. Yates's life.

[Miſs Jones was dreſſed in mourning, appeared to be a woman of elegant manners, and was very affecting in her language and delivery.]

Footner ſaid little more than accounting for his being in the houſe in the way Sellers had previouſly related, merely calling as an acquaintance of Sellers.

Evidence to character was only called in favour of Sellers: ſeveral perſons proved him a quiet, humane, inoffenſive man.

On the evidence being cloſed, Mr. Juſtice Rooke recapitulated the whole of it. The leading parts of his charge were in effect as follows;

"That the three priſoners, John Sellers, Elizabeth Jones, and William Footner were charged as follows: That John Sellers had murdered Thomas Yates by ſhooting him with a piſtol, and that Elizabeth Jones and William Footner were preſent, aiding and abetting him in the act."

The queſtion for the jury to decide firſt, would be, Whether Sellers had or had not wilfully ſhot Thomas Yates? If he had—Whether the other priſoners were, at the time of the killing, either actually preſent, or, by the rules of law, conſtructively ſo, and aided and aſſiſted Sellers when Yates received his death wound?

In order to clear all doubts reſpecting the law, he would ſtate what the law was, or what he took the law to be. Then the jury would apply the facts to that law,

law, and form their own conclusion upon the case;

First, then, he would say, that whoever had the title to the house where this deed was done, Mr. Yates was, and for some time had been, by the rule of law, either in joint or permissive possession; therefore, his servant being in the house, continuing that possession, to say nothing of his wife, if he took up the window in order to enter, all other access being debarred from him, and he thought proper to enter the house by such means as breaking open by force the window, or any other part, he was justifiable in so doing; and if any person shot him in that attempt, that person was guilty of murder. That was the law as he conceived it. He had no doubt of it. Mr. Yates had a right to enter in this case; he had never quitted wholly the premises. He had a joint possession, as supposed by some; permissive possession, as thought by others; no matter which: he had a right to take advantage of his servant being in the house to keep that possession, and to enter by what means he could, if he found himself locked out. If therefore Sellers shot him wilfully, as he was endeavouring to enter, Sellers was guilty of murder. That was the principal act for the jury to enquire into. The next thing would be for the jury to consider whether the other prisoners were aiding and abetting Sellers, supposing that he was guilty. If they saw Mr. Yates coming into the house, or knew he was coming, and told Sellers to go down and shoot him, they would also be guilty of murder; for that would be aiding and abetting him in the act, and would amount to what the law denominated a constructive presence. If they counselled and advised the act, they would also be guilty. The next point would be, that, supposing Sellers was not guilty of the murder, whether he was not guilty of manslaughter. Having stated the law, the learned judge proceeded to the facts, and desired the jury to apply them to the law.

He then recited the whole of the evidence most ably, and made many excellent comments as he proceeded, but which the prescribed limits of our work prevent us from detailing.

Upon the subject of the parties being in danger from Mr. Yates, the learned judge observed, that if they thought themselves so, they should have gone to a magistrate to procure a warrant to preserve the peace. But the law never allowed men to carry arms and use pistols to preserve peaceable possession of a dwelling—peaceable possession was not to be kept through the medium of blood and death, for that the law was sufficient to protect them in that respect by peaceable means. But the consequences here arose from taking the advice of a man who dabbled in what he did not understand, an half-intelligent person. From the proctor, Mr. Beard, who thought these parties could use force to keep Mr. Yates out of possession, this great mischief had arisen. He wished that in future men would understand points of law before they advised others how to act.

The learned judge having noticed all the points of the evidence, thought it was clear that the prisoners, Miss Jones and Mr. Footner, ought to be acquitted upon this case. With regard to Sellers, the jury should consider whether he fired the pistol wilfully; if he did, he was guilty of murder—if the pistol went off by accident, accident, it was only manslaughter—short of that it could not be.

The jury retired for a few minutes, and brought in their verdict—John Sellers, not guilty of the murder, but guilty of manslaughter—Elizabeth Jones and Richard Footner, not guilty.—Sellers was sentenced to 6 months imprisonment, and fined 1s.

Mail Coaches.

William Clark, the driver of the Newmarket mail coach, was tried on an indictment for having committed wilful murder on the body of Michael Connor, a boy of 10 years of age, by driving over him a carriage drawn by four horses, which caused his death. The second count in the indictment charged the prisoner with having committed manslaughter on the body of the said Michael Connor.

It appeared by the testimony of several witnesses, that on the 16th of August last, the birth-day of the Duke of York, one of his royal highness's tradesmen, in Bishopsgate street, was putting up illuminations on the occasion; and several children and other persons were out in the street about eight o'clock to see them. At this time the Newmarket mail coach, driven by the prisoner, came along this street at a very quick and violent pace. The horses were gallopping. The several persons who were viewing the illuminations got out of the way as quick as they could; and as the poor child who had been killed was endeavouring to escape the coach, one of the fore-feet of the foremost horses struck him in the back, knocked him down, and both the wheels ran over him. He did not live half an hour after.

The guard of the mail coach corroborated the testimony of the witnesses; but he said that as the coach approached the place where the accident happened, he blew his horn, which he thought might have given them sufficient notice: but the noise they made probably prevented them from hearing it. The witness did not know of the accident till he heard it from the coachman, who expressed himself with great sorrow at what had happened. He said the prisoner was a very good-natured lad, and would not knowingly hurt any body.

A surgeon swore that the death of the deceased was occasioned by the coach going over him.

John Morris, a clerk, belonging to a mercantile house in London, swore, that he being desirous that evening of going some distance, waited to get a lift on the coach; which he had in view at the time the accident happened. He passed by the place, and saw the child lying after, having been run over. Upon overtaking the coach, and getting up on the box, he told the prisoner that the coach had run over a child; and he answered with astonishment—"Have I indeed?" and seemed very much affected.

Mr. George Bolton, a proprietor of the mail coaches, said, he knew the prisoner from a child: that he was a lad of a remarkable good disposition; and he never knew him to have been in liquor in his life. Mr. Bolton said, that the proprietors of mail coaches were under articles with the Post-Office to deliver the mails at a limited time, which obliged the mail coaches, allowing for various stoppages, &c. to travel at the rate of 10 miles an hour.

Thomas Wilson, another proprietor of mail coaches, gave the prisoner a very good character.

Baron Thompſon obſerved to the jury, that there was nothing ſo clear as that perſons driving carriages through the public ſtreets were bound by law to move ſlowly and cautiouſly; and if a perſon ſo driving ſuppoſed there was danger, and, having it in his power to prevent it, did not do ſo, but by going on precipitately, cauſed the death of any perſon, he was, if not guilty of murder, at leaſt guilty of manſlaughter. The chief queſtion which the jury had then to decide was, whether the priſoner at the time the accident happened was driving improperly. The circumſtance of the perſons being under articles to perform a certain contract, could not juſtify an illegal act, ſuch as driving furiouſly through the ſtreets certainly was. The priſoner did not appear to be guilty of wilful murder. The queſtion was, whether he was guilty of manſlaughter; and if it appeared that he was driving negligently, he certainly was guilty of that crime.

The jury retired for two hours, and returned with a verdict of NOT GUILTY generally. At the ſame time the foreman informed the court, that the gentlemen of the jury were unanimouſly of opinion, that the practice of driving carriages faſt through the ſtreets was highly reprehenſible; and hoped means might be adopted to prevent it.

Mr. Baron Thompſon highly approved of this opinion delivered by the jury, and hoped the proprietors of mail coaches would take notice of it. No agreement with the Poſt Office could juſtify their coachmen in driving furiouſly through the ſtreets. The priſoner came off very well: and he did not think that any other coachman who ſhould hereafter come there in the ſame ſituation, would be ſo fortunate.

CHARLES SCOLDWELL

Was tried for ſtealing two ducks, the property of Thomas Spurling, of Bedfont, Middleſex.

The evidence produced on this trial, proved the facts as ſtated in our Magazine of laſt month, (ſee page 235,) and which being made clear to the court and jury, he was found guilty.

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.

SIR Charles Turner has lately married the daughter of Sir William Gleadowe Newcomen, Bart. (the rich Iriſh banker, of Carrickglaſs, Ireland,) and has reſolved, in compliance with the firſt ſtipulation made by her father, to retire from the turf; his horſes are conſequently diſpoſed of. Benningbrough, a capital portraiture of whom forms a part of the embelliſhments to our Magazine for May laſt, has been ſold to Mr. Hutchinſon for 700gs!

Aug. 27.

Billiards is the morning rage at Brighton. Mr. Drew is accounted the firſt-rate player. A match was played this week for 900l. between Mr. Muſters and Captain Blagrave, to be ſettled in thirteen games; the latter won by a majority of four. Another match was alſo played between two other gentlemen, one confining himſelf to hole the ball only in one pocket, and allowing his opponent the other five. The former backed himſelf againſt every body in the room, to the amount of 1000l. and, after a maſterly conteſt, won his game.

Some days ago was run at Smarden, in Romney Walk, Canterbury, ten miles for two guineas, by Mr. George Gooding, peruke-maker, maker, aged 60, and Mr. Luke Aſhman, brewer and butcher, aged 25, (the brewer to carry thirty-five pounds weight, as an allowance to the peruke-maker for the difference of his age,) which was completed in one hour and fifty-five minutes by the brewer, and one hour and fifty-eight minutes by the peruke-maker.

VETERINARY SURGEONS FOR THE CAVALRY.

It is intended by government to attach a veterinary ſurgeon to each regiment of cavalry; and as an inducement for medical gentlemen to purſue the veterinary art, it is liberally propoſed to make them commiſſioned officers, and to give them 7s. per diem. And in order to prevent any but properly qualified veterinary ſurgeons from receiving theſe appointments, no pupil from the veterinary college can be engaged for the army without obtaining a diploma, ſigned by the medical committee and the profeſſor.

A new-formed corps of volunteers in the town of ——, were lately exerciſing in a park, where a bull was kept, and where he had been accuſtomed to enjoy unreſiſted ſovereignty. Whether diſpleaſed with the aukwardneſs of their manœuvres, offended at their intruſion on the ſcene of his pleaſures, or regarding their martial muſic as a challenge of defiance on his own territory, the lordly animal advanced with a menacing air, and notwithſtanding ſome attempts at reſiſtance charged the line, broke through the ranks, and after having completely routed and diſperſed the enemy, remained undiſputed maſter of the field!

The Arabian horſes brought from India, as a preſent to his majeſty, have from their long confinement contracted diſeaſes, particularly in the feet, from which it is not expected they will recover; they are ſeven in number, and are placed at the veterinary college.

Lately was taken alive in a field near Malmſbury, a beautiful ſky-lark, of this year's breed, marked in the following curious manner: Part of the head white, with a beautiful copper-coloured creſt on the top; the neck a pure white: between the wings a copper-coloured ſpot, ſurrounded by a circle of white; the breaſt yellow, with ſome faint ſpots of a copper-colour, with which the back and wings are variegated; all the tail, as well as the long feathers of the wings, were white; when in the act of flying, the under part of the wings and belly diſplay a clear white.

DUELLING.

Dublin, Aug. 27.

We hear at the races of Limerick, this week diſputes ran extremely high between ſome gentlemen from Cork and Youghall, and thoſe of the county of Limerick; in conſequence of which not leſs than four duels took place, in one of which, between a Captain M. of Walſh's brigade, and a Mr. Ryet, of Limerick, the former was ſhot through the body, his antagoniſt's ball having entered his right ſide, paſſed through his lungs, and out on the left ſide, which cauſed his death.

Monday morning, Sept. 3, between five and ſix, a duel was fought near Hounſlow, between Captain H. and Lieutenant. D of the dragoons: before they diſcharged charged ſhots, the ſeconds did every thing in their power to prevent it; but not being able, they fired together, but without effect, the ball of Captain H. paſſing through the hat of Lieutenant D. the ſeconds, a ſecond time tried to make the matter up, but proving ineffectual, they diſcharged ſhots a ſecond time, when Lieutenant D's ball entered the ſhoulder of Captain H. and Captain H's the leg of the former. The wounds, we underſtand are not dangerous.

A duel was fought at the iſle of Wight, laſt week, between two officers of a King's regiment, in conſequence of a miſunderſtanding over a bottle: two rounds were fired, and then the matter was made up, by the interference of the ſeconds.

September the 5, a duel was fought in Hyde Park, between Captain J. W. and Colonel C. the latter of whom we underſtand was wounded in three places; one of which, it is feared, will prove mortal.

Friday morning, Sept. 9, a duel was fought near Highgate by a naval officer, and a young gentleman of the firſt proſpects in England. They fired two ſhots each. The latter was wounded both times, when (his right arm being diſabled by the laſt ball penetrating it, and lodging about the ſhoulder blade) the ſeconds interfered, and put an end to the buſineſs. The wounded gentlemen received every requiſite aſſiſtance from a French ſurgeon of eminence, who attended the officer to the ground. A conſiderable degree of fever enſued; but we are happy to ſtate that neither of the wounds are mortal. The firſt ball grazed the breaſt-bone. The ſeconds were an officer, and a gentleman well known upon the turf. The cauſe of the meeting is imputed to the conduct of the wounded gentleman, at the Haymarket Theatre, a few evenings ſince, who it is ſaid, perſiſted in being troubleſome to a lady, who was under the protection of the officer at the time, for which he received a ſevere perſonal chaſtiſement, in conſequence of which a challenge was immediately given and accepted. The lady is a foreigner, and extremely beautiful. She has much faſhion in her appearance, and (fame rumours) is the chere amie of a perſon of no inconſiderable conſequence.

ARCHERY.

Aug. 22.

The annual meeting of the woodmen of Arden, was held on Meriden Heath, and the company of both ſexes was numerous. The firſt day the bugle horn was ſhot for at eleven ſcore yards, and won by Thomas Featherſtone, Eſq. On Wedneſday the ſilver arrow at nine ſcore yards, was eaſily won by the Rev. John John Dilke; and on Friday the grand target, T. Anderſon, Eſq. was captain of numbers; the gold medal, and maſter foreſter was the lot of R. York, Eſq. and the ſilver medal, and the office of ſenior verdurer that of W. Dilke, Eſq. The ladies had an ordinary each day at the Bull's Head, and a ball each evening in the Foreſt Hall.

An elegant ſilver bow, preſented by William Nelſon, Eſq. to the Merſey Bowmen of Liverpool, was ſhot for on Thurſday, Sept. 1. at targets one hundred yards diſtance, and won by Mr. G. Goring.

RINGING.

On Friday, Aug. 20, was rung a complete 5040 grandſire triples, at St. Mary's church, Kendal, in three hours and twenty minutes, by by the Westmoreland youths, being the greatest number of changes ever rung upon that noble peal at one time. The peal was divided into ten parts, or courses of 504 each; the bobs were called by the sixth, a lead single was made in the middle of the peal, and another at the conclusion, which brought the bells home. Dinstinct leads, and exact divisions were observed throughout the whole of the peal.

On Sunday, August 28, was rung at Kidderminster, a compleat peal of 5012 Grandsire Triples, by the ringers of that town; the peal was conducted through with one single, which was brought to the 4984th change, viz. 1267453. It is allowed by those conversant in the art to exceed any peal ever yet rung in this kingdom by that method. The same peal was composed, and called, by Stephen Hill. Time three hours and fourteen minutes.

Monday, Sept. 12, was attempted to be rung at Aston, by eight Birmingham youths, some of which are under 20 years of age, a compleat peal of 15120 bob-majors. After they had rung in a most masterly manner for upwards of eight hours and a half, they found themselves so much fatigued, that they requested the caller to take the first opportunity to bring the bells home, which he soon did by omitting a bob, and so brought them round, which made a compleat peal of 14224 changes, in eight hours and forty-five minutes, and was allowed to be fine striking through the whole performance, and the longest peal ever rung in that part of the country.

The same day was rung at St. Clement's Danes, Strand, a compleat 5040 new bob majors, in three hours, and eighteen minutes, by the society of young Cumberlands, being the greatest number ever rung on those bells in that time: the persons were as follows:

J. Noonan, treble; R. Jaggers, second; B. Merrin, third; J. Hints, fourth; J. Baker, fifth; W. Trupe, sixth: W. Fletcher, seventh; T. Ovenden, tenor. This peal was composed and called by J. Noonan.

BOXING.

A severe battle was lately fought in Felix-street, Lambeth, between the Little Nailer, (a sadler) and the Tall Tinman. The first knock down blow was given by the tall tinman, while the little nailor was preparing for the combat; but, however surprising it may appear, the little nailor, who is not five feet high, made the tall tinman run away with his nose slit, crying out "no moore, no moore, no moore!" begging for mercy, and imploring the multitude to protect him from the little nailer's hard blows.

ONE TAYLOR MAKES A MAN.

Wednesday August 21, a desperate battle was fought at Gretton Lodge, near Stamford, between Hercock, a farmer, of Blatherwick, and Boone, a taylor, of Gretton, when after a severe conflict of more than an hour, victory was declared in favour of the Knight of the thimble, who during the fight had given his antagonist no less than thirty fair knock down blows!!!

Sept. 22. A battle was fought at Beadon Well, near Erith, in Kent, between Chapman, a young man born without arms, and Knight, a blacksmith, of Woolwich, a noted fighter. The contest lasted near an hour, during which time Chapman so well played his part, both with head and heels that

that his antagoniſt was taken off the field of battle with two broken ribs.

AQUATIC SPORTS.

ROWING MATCH.

Monday, Auguſt 29th, in conſequence of a long depending wager of twenty gutneas, two four oared cutters, called the Albion and the Weſtmoreland, ſtarted to row againſt tide from the centre arch of Weſtminſter Bridge, to Kew Bridge, a diſtance of twelve or fourteen miles.

For the firſt quarter of a ile ſcarcely any difference could be obſerved between them; but before they were entirely out of Lambeth Reach, the men of the Weſtmoreland ſeemed ſenſible of the ſuperior ſtrength of their opponents, and adopted the expedient of rowing immediately in their wake, ſo that, as the tide was broken for them, they might reſerve their own ſtrength for ſome ſudden effort, when the others ſhould be more wearied. The crew of the Albion, however, gradually increaſed their advantage; and when at Putney Bridge, they were conſiderably a-head. They then ſlackened their exertions, and were the winners at Kew by leſs than two minutes.

An eight oared barge, in which were the umpires, preceded them the whole way; the umpires ſitting with their faces to the ſtern.

Sept. 5.

In conſequence of a ſubſcription of the gentlemen reſiding at Bankſide, a rowing match took place between ſix waterman's apprentices, who had not ſerved two years of their time, for a gold laced hat, and other prizes; the gold laced hat was won by John Whaite, apprentice to Thomas Thornberry, of Bankſide.

Sept. 15.

There was a rowing match on the river, between two watermen, Penn and Brummel, for forty guineas. They rowed againſt tide from the Swan at London-Bridge, to the Swan at Chelſea. The two boats kept nearly alongſide of each other till they came within three hundred yards of Weſtminſter Bridge, when Brummel, by a dexterous manœuvre, puſhed a-head of his adverſary, and continued to take the lead for the remainder of the way. Bets to a conſiderable amount were laid on the occaſion. Penn was the favourite, as being much the ſtrongeſt man; but activity prevailed over ſtrength.

A few days ſince ſix men of Clontarf, in Ireland, in one barge, propoſed to row againſt eight Swedes in another. A wager was laid, and the two parties rowed from the Marine Hotel to the Light Houſe, and back, a diſtance of nine miles. The Clontarfmen, who won by a conſiderable diſtance, rowed that ſpace in an hour and forty minutes.

Lately four officers of the 58th regiment, now quartered at Cowes, laid a conſiderable bet they would ſwim with the tide from the wharf at Newport, to the Caſtle on the parade at Cowes. Two of the officers were ſeized with the cramp about half way, and were obliged to be taken up by the boats; the other two, Captain Pigot, and Lieutenant Power, ſucceeded, and ſwam it in two hours and ten minutes. The diſtances is aſcertained to be five miles and three quarters.

One night in the beginning of this month, Mr. Wm. Eggar, of Hill Farm, in the pariſh of Bentley, Hants, hearing his dogs bark more more violently than ufual, got up and called his men to furround his buildings: Mr. Eggar himfelf, with a loaded piftol, went to the ftable in which his beft team of horfes ftood, where he found two of their manes and long tails cut off, and a third begun upon. On fearching, Mr. Eggar difcovered the villain who had thus atrocioufly disfigured his horfes, and was about to plunder him of his property, concealed in the chaff-hole: he was immediately fecured, and upon his perfon were found a large carving-knife, tinder-box, matches, &c. The above, however, was only a part of the robber's depredations; for to the cart-horfe was found tied a jackafs, with a fack containing the manes and tails of five horfes cut from the team of Mr. Knight, of Coxbridge, the fame night. He was committed to Winchefter gaol for trial.

THE BITER BIT.

A few days ago, a game-keeper to a nobleman in Suffolk, fet a man-trap for a fufpected poacher, who, watching the keeper's retreat from the trap, took the liberty to remove and fecret it in the way of the keeper's intercourfe to the fpot, who unfortunately, juft before daylight next morning, being heard to call out for help, was found perfonating his intended vifitor in the trap.

CASUALTIES.

Auguft 22, died, at the Bald Buck, in Litchfield, the noted Jack Lewton, chaife-driver. He was buried on the Wednefday following in St. Michael's churchyard, and, by his own requeft, as near to the turnpike road leading to Burton as poffible, that he might, as he expreffed himfelf, enjoy the fatisfaction of hearing his brother whips pafs and repafs. He particularly defired to have his corpfe carried to the grave by fix chaife-drivers, (his late companions,) in fcarlet jackets and buckfkin breeches, the pall to be fupported by the like number of oftlers from different inns, and the mourners to confift of fix publicans with their wives. The proceffion, in their way to the grave, were defired to ftop at the Old Crown Inn, and to refrefh themfelves with each a glafs of Holland's, his favourite liquor.

September 10, a melancholy accident happened at Chevely, Suffolk, where a boy of the name of Tweed being employed in keeping birds off a field of corn, placed his gun againft a poft, with the muzzle upwards, and inadvertently leaning over the fame, it accidently went off, when he received the whole contents in his throat, and was killed on the fpot, his head being nearly blown off his fhoulders.

September 12, as a young man belonging to Mr. Polegrave, of Wellingore, near Lincoln, was riding a poney, the faddle turned, and his foot being faft in the ftirrup, he was dragged upwards of a mile, and mangled moft dreadfully. He was dead when releafed from the horfe.

Sept. 14, as Francis Lefevre, Efq. of Great Ormond-ftreet, Queen-fquare, was fhooting with his double-barrelled gun, about four inches of the right-hand barrel, clofe to the hand, with part of the lock, was completely blown off, but he fortunately received no injury from the accident.

At Barnet races, September 15, the following fhocking accident hap-happened, during the firſt heat:—Mr. Henwood's horſe, Hazard, and a mare belonging to Mr. Bott, conteſting the heat, they run with ſuch velocity, that the jockey who rode Hazard was incapable of pulling him in, and after paſſing the winning-poſt, a gentleman's carriage being imprudently ſtationed in an improper part of the courſe, he ran with ſuch force againſt the wheel, as to fracture his ſkull; the rider was thrown againſt the carriage, and from thence on the fore-wheel, and was ſo much hurt, that it is thought he cannot recover. The poor animal lingered in the greateſt agonies, till, from humanity, ſome gentlemen on the courſe ordered his throat to be cut. Several people ſuſtained injury by being thrown down from the accident. Mr. Bott won the purſe. Some other accidents occurred on Finchley Common on returning home; a one-horſe chaiſe broke down, and two cockney ſportſmen were diſmounted, but neither received any material injury.

Sept. 16, an alarming accident happened to Lady Cope, as ſhe was ſitting in her chaiſe, near the Seſſions Houſe, in Lewes, owing to the ſudden fright of her horſe, who ran away with the carriage, and got foul of a poſt that overturned it with great violence; her ladyſhip, however, happily eſcaped without much hurt, having received only a ſlight wound on her head. The horſe in plunging, tore away the ſhafts, and ran over two women, who were conſiderably hurt, particularly one of them, who received ſeveral wounds and bruiſes. A gentleman was in the chaiſe with Lady Cope when the accident happened, but, by jumping out in time, eſcaped the danger which her ladyſhip was expoſed to.

Mr. Wentworth, the great Yorkſhire commoner, we are ſorry to hear, fell with his horſe, a few days ſince, and had three of his ribs broken.

A ſhort time ſince, Iſaac Bumpſtead, ſon of one of the keepers in the New Foreſt, Hampſhire, who acted as under-keeper to his father, going his accuſtomed round with his rifle-barrel, loaded with ball, by accident the piece had diſcharged, and ſhot the young man in the forehead, who was found by his brother weltering in his gore, with the gun faſt clenched in his hand.—On the inqueſt, verdict—accidental death.

The following diſaſtrous affair lately happened in the neighbourhood of Tanfield: Mr. Thomas Newton, farmer, at Andrews's Houſe, near the above place, went into the field to give his mare a feed of corn, which ſhe refuſed to eat, gnaſhed her teeth at him, and ſhewed other ſymptoms of madneſs; on his returning, the mare purſued him in the moſt furious manner, when fortunately another horſe being at hand, Mr. Newton mounted him, and rode home without receiving any injury. The mare was then got into a yard, where, after tearing herſelf in a moſt ſhocking manner, and frequently ſtriking her head againſt the wall, ſhe died the ſame evening. What adds to this dreadful diſaſter, nearly the whole of Mr. Newton's ſtock were grazing in the ſame paſture with the mare, and two of his beſt cows have diſcovered viſible marks of being bitten. Every means are uſing to prevent further fatal effects.

Cricket

ON Friday, Auguſt 12 and 13, and poſtponed to the 20th, was played a grand match at Cricket, in Lord's Ground, Mary-le-bone, between eleven gentlemen of the Montpelier and Kennington Clubs, againſt eleven gentlemen of the Middleſex Club, for 500 guineas.

POETRY.

THE HIGH COURT OF DIANA.

SPECIMEN OF THE SONGS IN COLMAN'S IRON CHEST.

SAMSON.

A Traveller ftopt at a widow's gate;
She kept an inn, and he wanted to bait;——
But the landlady flighted her gueft;
For when Nature was making an ugly race,
She certainly moulded this traveller's face,
As a fample for all the reft.

The chamber-maid's fides they were ready to crack,
When fhe faw his queer nofe, and the hump at his back;—
A hump is'nt handfome, no doubt—
And though 'tis confefs'd, that the prejudice goes,
Very ftrongly, in favour of wearing a nofe,
Yet a nofe fhould'nt look like a fnout.

A bag full of gold on the table he laid—
'Thad a wond'rous effect on the widow and maid!
And they quickly grew marvellous civil.
The money immediately alter'd the cafe;
They were charm'd with his hump, and his fnout, and his face,
Tho' he ftill might have frighted the devil.

He paid like a prince—gave the widow a fmack—
Then flop'd on his horfe, at the door, like a fack;
While the landlady, touching the chink,
Cried—"Sir, fhould you travel this country again,
"I heartily hope that the fweeteft of men
"Will ftop at the widow's to drink."

THE MITRED BOXER.

WITH lawn fleeves and drawn fleeves a Bifhop appears,
Talks loudly of fweet orthodoxy;
But a layman or drayman muft look to his ears,
For offend him, he'll furely box ye.

A doc-

A doctrine, no doubt, both carnal and fleshy,
 'Gainst which much is said in the pulpit,
Though, instead of advice, he hold forth to thresh ye!
 And indeed what mortal can gulp it?

The deeds of the flesh should be slow to rebel,
 Nor suffer'd to rise with such fury;
Too violent a swell cannot be so well,
 Nor pleasing to judge, though to jury.

THE CHAPTER OF KINGS.

THE Romans in England they once did
 sway,
And the Saxons they after them led the
 way,
And they tugg'd with the Danes till an overthrow
They both of them got by the Norman bow.
 Yet, barring all pother, the one and the other
 Were all of them kings in their turn.

Little Willy the Conquerer long did reign,
But Billy his son by an arrow was slain;
And Harry the First was a scholar bright,
But Stephy was forc'd for his crown to
 fight.
 Yet, barring, &c.

Second Harry, Plantagenet's name did
 bear,
And Cœur de Lion was his son and heir;
But Magna Charta we gain'd from John,
Which Harry the Third put his seal upon.
 Yet, barring, &c.

There was Teddy the First like a tiger
 bold,
But the Second by rebels was bought and sold;
And Teddy the Third was his subjects'
 pride,
Though his grandson Dicky was popp'd
 aside.
 Yet, barring, &c.

There was Harry the Fourth, a warlike
 wight,
And Harry the Fifth like a cock would
 fight,
Though Henry his son like a chick did
 pout,
When Teddy his cousin had kick'd him
 out.
 Yet, barring, &c.

Poor Teddy the Fifth he was kill'd in bed,
By butchering Dick, who was knock'd in
 head;
Then Harry the Seventh in fame grew big,
And Harry the Eighth was as fat as a pig.
 Yet, barring, &c.

With Teddy the Sixth we had tranquil days,
Though Mary made fire and faggot blaze;
But good Queen Bess was a glorious dame,
And bonny King Jamy from Scotland
 came.
 Yet, barring, &c.

Poor Charley the First was a martyr made,
But Charley his son was a comical blade;
And Jemmy the Second, when hotly
 spurr'd,
Ran away, do you see me, from Willy the Third.
 Yet, barring, &c.

Queen Ann was victorious by land and sea,
And Georgey the First did with glory
 sway;
And, as Georgey the Second has long been dead,
Long life to the Georgey we have in his
 stead;
 And may his son's sons, to the end of the chapter,
 All come to be kings in their turn.

THE SHEPHERD AND HIS DOG.

WRITTEN BY G. S. CAREY.

ON a green slope, beneath an hawthorn's
 shade;
Poor Will, the shepherd, carelessly was laid;
His nibbling flocks were busied all around,
Some on the high, and some the low-land
 ground;
The faithful Trusty watching near his side,
In which his master took a world of pride;
And now the swain uplifts his pensive eyes
Surveying round the clear expanded skies,
Beheld the sun with mid-day lustre shine,
From which he learnt it was his hour to
 dine;
His humble viands from his scrip he took,
And from his pouch a tatter'd pious book,
From which some grateful oraison he read,
'Ere he partook his scanty share of bread,
For small is now, alas! each poor man's
 lot,
And meager hunger stares from out each
 cot;
Yet whatsoe'er might prove the shepherd's
 fare,
He scorn'd to stint his Trusty in his share,
But, while he eats, his usual portion gives,
Which his poor slave right thankfully re-
 cieves,

Wags

Wags his frank tail, and fondles at his feet
For crumbs of bread—for he had seldom meat.
Now while he hous'ſs out his humble meal,
Trying how much to Truſty he can deal,
Pats his lean ſides with many a tender ſtroke,
Then ſtraight as tenderly to him he ſpoke:
"Thou little knoweſt, poor Truſty, of "thy ſtate;
"Thou little know'ſt what miſeries await
"On thee, I fear, and all thy wretched "kind,
"Plann'd and contriv'd within ſome hu-"man mind:
"As with Fidelity they were at ſtrife,
"A price is ſet upon thy harmleſs life.
"Faithful to me thou'ſt been, and to my "fold,
"In burning ſummers, and in winters "cold;
"In early morning, or in evening late;
"In darkſome nights, a guardian to my "gate;
"In roads of peril haſt thou been my "guide,
"Thro' wayward paths, o'er dreary heaths, "and wide;
"And when we've ceas'd the wearying "hills to roam,
"Thou'ſt cheer'd my heart, with little "tricks at home.
"Muſt I reſign thee!—that ſhall never "be,
"Or tamely part with ſuch ſincerity?
"No—while theſe hands poſſeſs the pow'r "to toil,
"Or while theſe lands yield nurture from "the ſoil,
"Thou ſhalt partake while here on earth "I live,
"Then beg to die, when I've no more to "give."

THE BLACKBIRD,

A Favourite Song, ſung by Maſter WELCH, at VAUXHALL.

'TWAS on a bank of daiſies ſweet,
A lovely maiden ſigh'd;
The little lambs play'd at her feet,
While ſhe in ſorrow cried——

"Where is my love; where can he ſtray,"
When thus a black-bird ſung——
"Sweet, ſweet, ſweet, ſweet! he will not "ſtay,"
The air with muſic rung.

"Ah, mock me not, bold bird," ſhe ſaid,
"And why, pray, tarry here?—
Doſt thou bemoan ſome Youngling fled;
Or, haſt thou loſt thy dear?
Doſt thou lament his abſence?—Say?"
Again the Blackbird ſung—
"Sweet, ſweet, ſweet, ſweet! he will not "ſtay,"
The air with muſic rung.

"Sing on," ſhe cry'd, "thou charming "bird,
Thoſe dulcet ſtrains repeat!
No muſic e'er like thine was heard
So truly ſweet, ſweet, ſweet:
Oh, that my love was here to-day!"
Once more the blackbird ſung—
"Sweet, ſweet, ſweet, ſweet! he comes this "way,"
The air with muſic rung.

THE RIDER AND SAND-BOY.

A TALE.

TO give the laſt poliſh to youth, 'tis agreed
That travel doth all formal precepts ex-exceed:
It adds eaſe and freedom to claſſic glean'd knowledge,
Rubs off the ſchool ruſt, and the ſtiffneſs of college;
As proof of this ſyſtem, what men are ſo eaſy
As thoſe who for orders ſo fluently teaze ye;
Who ride round the country, and ſhew far and near,
Their Mancheſter patterns, or Birmingham ware?

One day after dinner, as ſome of theſe wags,
Were cracking their filberts and praiſing their nags,
A poor ſhoeleſs urchin, half ſtarv'd, and ſun-tann'd,
Paſs'd near th' inn window, crying—"Buy my fine ſand!"
When SADDLE-BAG SAMMY—long fam'd for his fun,
To banter the duſt-covered ſqualler begun,
"What doſt cry there, my lad?" "Why ſand, ſir." "And prithee
"Haſt got a large ſtock? I ſee none of it "with thee."
"Oh—I leaves ſand and Neddy about the "town's borders,
"And am juſt going round, ſir, to look "out for orders."

Bath, July 6, 1796.

COLIN AND PHŒBE's CUCKOO;

A NEW SONG.

IN the fields, when to Phœbe, one ſweet ſummer's day,
I was making of love, and ſhe making of hay,
On a ſudden ſhe lean'd on her prong, and cry'd, "Pray
"Hark, hark,—don't you hear?
"there's the cuckoo."

Then my ſhoulder ſhe tapp'd, and cry'd, "Colin, I fear,
"No cuckoo this ſeaſon before ſtruck your "ear;
"So, if pennyleſs now, you'll be poor "thro' the year;
"Dear heart how unlucky a "cuckoo!"

With a claſp then ſo cloſe that ſhe could not withſtand, Cry'd I "'tis in vain that my fortune "you've ſcann'd,
"For if empty in purſe, I've an angel in "hand;
"So I think I'm a match for the "cuckoo!"

Then her head hanging down with ſweet modeſty's grace,
Like an angel to bleſs me, ſhe nam'd time and place;
And ſhe tells me, ſhe now never looks in my face.
But it puts her in mind of a cuckoo.

This poor little bird, they'd perſuade me, bode horns;
But to prove love, if blind, blinder prejudice ſcorns,
An old piece of Dutch clockwork our chimney adorns,
And we all the year round hear the cuckoo.

June 20, 1796. BRUSH.

IMPROMPTU,

On hearing the young and beautiful Mrs. SECOND ſing at the Muſical Feſtival, in Birmingham, for the benefit of the General Hoſpital there, before the moſt numerous and brilliant audiences that ever honoured any part of the kingdom, out of the metropolis, on ſuch an occaſion.

WHEN the great Cognoſcenti, full ripe from the ſchools,
Like ARISTARCH, fluſh'd with dogmatical rules;
Fame's weathercock veering, found ways how to fix it,
And managed the vane with a mere Ipſe Dixit;
They of MARA pronounc'd, and diſpute it who durſt,
That, of all vocal prodigies, SHE was the FIRST!
But, as flowers in autumn will fade and decay,
And leaves ſhrink and dry till they drop from the ſpray;
So the vet'ran in fame, paſt heyday and prime,
Muſt, like Time-beating Stephen, be beaten by Time,
And though not convinc'd, while with thouſands imburs'd,
That "The firſt may be laſt, and the laſt may be firſt;"
Yet, if Fate ſeconds Fortune, that doughty old dame,
The next idol to rear on the topſtone of Fame;
Who with thrilling ſenſations enraptures the throng,
While the Loves and the Graces add charms to her ſong;
Though MARA, 'mong warblers, the Firſt is now reckon'd,
Not remote is the day when the FIRST will be SECOND!

LINES,

IN ANSWER TO THE DOG-TAX NOTICE.

SINCE the King has thought fit,
Thro' his Miniſter PITT,
To tax all the dogs in the land:
And as you've requir'd,
I'll do as deſir'd,
And make my returns out of hand.

No greyhoune have I,
Nor terrier, not I,
No ſpaniel, nor pointer, nor hound,
No ſetting dog, lurcher,
Nor houſe-vermin ſearcher,
Is through my whole houſe to be found.

No lap dogs for madam,
(Theſe I'd kill, if I had 'em)
Such reptiles are beſt when they're dead;
They are fed on the beſt,
And by madam careſt,
While the poor are half ſtarving for bread.

But puppies, they ſay,
Are allowed to ſtray,
Without being tax'd, as you ſee;
Peruſe well the act,
And you'll find it a fact,
They've neither tax'd you, nor tax'd me.
